The point upon which the learned Advocate, who appeared for the Petitioner, relied was that the appeal to the learned Judge was out of time and the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and to make the order. This point was taken before the learned Judge apparently, for he said as follows:—"It is urged in his case" (that is, the case of Chandra Kumar Sen) "that the appeal is barred by time as the Subordinate Judge passed orders on the 1st of October 1923 that he would not proceed against Respondents Nos. 2 and 3. I do not think that I am bound by any rule of limitation in a case of this kind. When an offence in connection with the administration of civil justice comes to the notice of the District Judge it is open to him to lodge a complaint in the Criminal Courts although a subordinate Civil Court may not have thought it necessary to take action." The learned Judge then proceeded to say that the case was of such gravity that he would be failing in his duty if he did not institute a complaint.

With much respect to the learned Judge I am of opinion that the provisions of the material sections do not support the conclusion at which he arrived.

Sec. 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure deals with the procedure, which is to be adopted in cases referred to in sec. 195, sub-sec. (1), cl. (b) or cl. (c), by a Court, with regard to offences which appear to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court:

and, sec. 476A confers certain powers upon a superior Court where the subordinate Court has omitted to take action. It is desirable to refer to the terms of the section, which are as follows:—

476A. "The power conferred on Civil, Revenue and Criminal Courts by sec. 476, sub-sec. (1), may be exercised in respect of any offence referred to therein and alleged to have been committed in or in relation to any proceeding in any such Court, by the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of sec. 195, sub-sec. (3), in any case in which such former Court has neither made a complaint under sec. 476 in respect of such offence nor rejected an application for the making of such complaint; and, where the superior Court makes such complaint, the provision of sec. 476 shall apply accordingly."

In my judgment that section does not apply to this case, because there was an application made to the learned Subordinate Judge, and the learned Subordinate Judge rejected the application for the making of the complaint.

The next sec. 476B gives certain rights of appeal not only to the person against whom a complaint has been directed but also to the person whose application for a complaint has been rejected. The words of the section are as follows:—476B. "Any person on whose application any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court has refused to make a complaint under sec. 476 or sec. 476A or against whom such a complaint has been made, may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of sec. 195, sub-sec. (3) and the superior Court may thereupon, after notice to the parties concerned, direct the withdrawal of the complaint or as the case may be, itself make the complaint which the subordinate Court might have made under sec. 476, and if it makes such complaint the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly."

Therefore, it appears to me that the scheme of the sections is that, if the subordinate Court has neither made a complaint under sec. 476 nor rejected an application for the making of a complaint, then the superior Court may take action and make a complaint. But where, as in this case, the subordinate Court has rejected the application for the making of such complaint, then the procedure, which is contemplated by the Code, is by way of an appeal to the superior Court.

This matter came before the learned District Judge by way of appeal, and in view of the above-mentioned sections, the learned District Judge, in my judgment, should have considered whether the appeal was filed within the time specified.

The article in the Limitation Act which applies to this matter is Art. 154, and the material section of the Act is sec. 3 which provides that "subject to the provisions contained in secs. 4 to 25 (inclusive) every suit instituted, appeal preferred, and application made, after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first schedule shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence.

Under Art. 154, the period of limitation for an "appeal under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, to any Court other than a High Court," is "thirty days" and the time from which the period begins to run is "the date of the sentence or order appealed from."

It is therefore, clear that, as the order appealed from was made on the 1st of October 1923 and the appeal was not filed till the 7th of August 1924, the appeal was out of time.

This rule therefore must be made absolute, and the order of the learned District Judge of the 31st January 1925, directing criminal proceedings to be instituted against Chandra Kumar Sen must be set aside.

No order need be made as regards the appeal (No. 210 of 1925) in connection with the same matter.

This was an appeal (No. 94 of 1923) from a decree, dated the 18th March 1920, of the High Court at Allahabad, which reversed a decree, dated the 30th November 1916, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore.

The parties were Hindus governed by the Mitakshara and were descended from a common ancestor, Padum Singh, who on his death left two sons Hira Singh and Madho Singh. The Appellants were in the line of the latter and the Respondents (Plaintiffs) in that of the former.

The question for determination was whether the Appellant Musammât Bhagwani Kunwar's father Gulab Singh was joint or separate from the Plaintiffs at the time of his death.

The Subordinate Judge found against the question of jointness and dismissed the suit but that finding was reversed by the High Court who held that the Plaintiffs were entitled to possession by right of survivorship.

The facts are fully dealt with in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellants.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Wallach for the Respondents.

The arguments were mainly directed to the evidence.

The following authorities were referred to in addition to those mentioned in the judgment.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal by Defendants from a decree, dated the 18th March 1920, of the High Court at Allahabad, which reversed a decree, dated the 30th November 1916, of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, by which the suit had been dismissed.

The suit in which this appeal has arisen is a suit in which the Plaintiffs claimed a decree for the proprietary possession of an eight-anna share in each of the villages of Auria (Auria Tikra) and Aurangpur Gahdewa and certain fractional shares in four other zamindari villages in the Cawnpore District by dis-possession of the Defendants, who were in possession and denied the title of the Plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit; the High Court on appeal gave the Plaintiffs the decree for the possession which they claimed. The parties were Hindus of the Thakur Gaur caste and were subject to the law of the Mitakshara. The following pedigree will sufficiently show how the parties were related, but their Lordships do not know which of the brothers Madho Singh and Hira Singh, or of the brothers Diwan Singh and Bahadur Singh, was the elder :—

MUST. BHAGWANI KUNWAR v. MOHAN SINGH.

The suit was brought on the 12th November 1914, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore after the death of Musummat Kanchan Kunwar. When the suit was brought Bahadur Singh was about 80 years of age and Niwaz Singh was about 76 years of age. As Diwan Singh was not a party to the suit, although his son Pancham Singh was a Plaintiff, their Lordships have assumed that Diwan Singh was then dead. The most material question in the suit is whether Gulab Singh was, when he died, joint with, or separate from, his cousins Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh.

Padum Singh and his sons Madho Singh and Hira Singh admittedly had constituted a joint Hindu family. Padum Singh died before his sons, and at his death Madho Singh and Hira Singh were joint. It is well-established law that those who allege that the members of a joint Hindu family had separated must prove, unless it is admitted, that there was a separation at some material time. That material time in this case must have been before the death of Gulab Singh. Hira Singh had died in 1862, and Madho Singh had died in 1867. Gulab Singh died sonless in 1886. The case of the Plaintiffs was, and is, that Gulab Singh was until he died a member of the joint family, which, until he died, consisted of the then living male descendants in the male line of Padum Singh. The case of the Defendants, Appellants, is that Madho Singh and Hira Singh had separated, and consequently that Gulab Singh was separate from his cousins Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh. It happened in 1896 or in 1898 that the then members of the joint family separated. That separation did not take place at a material time so far as this suit is concerned, but the learned Subordinate Judge incorrectly held that the separation in 1896 or 1898 shifted the burden of proof, and that it was for the Plaintiffs to prove that Gulab Singh was joint when he died in 1886. How far that misunderstanding of the law affected the Subordinate Judge in his consideration of the evidence in this suit, it is impossible to say, but he found on the evidence that Gulab Singh was separate at the time of his death. The High Court found on the evidence that Gulab Singh was, when he died, a member of the joint family.

Their Lordships will later express the conclusion at which they have arrived as to whether there had or had not been a separation before Gulab Singh died, but before doing so they will refer to another question which must be considered, although they agree with the conclusions at which the Courts below were in agreement on that subject. Their Lordships will now briefly state what that other question is.

The property in question in this suit came into the possession of Kanchan Kunwar shortly after the death of her husband Gulab Singh. The question which their Lordships will first consider is how and in what right did Kanchan Kunwar obtain and hold possession. That property had been entered in the revenue and village papers in the name of Gulab Singh, and Kanchan Kunwar, as his widow, claimed to be entitled to the possession of it. That claim could not be maintained unless Gulab Singh had died as a separated Hindu. That claim by Kanchan Kunwar was, in fact, made, and she got possession, but, according to the case of the Plaintiffs, she was allowed by Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh, who were then of age, to take possession under an agreement of compromise made between her and them, by which she was allowed possession of the property for her life for her maintenance, and not as property of which she had any right to the possession.

Gulab Singh was older than his cousins Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh, and after Hira Singh and Madho Singh had died he was the head of the family, and appears to have acted generally as the family manager, and some villages which were purchased after the death of Madho Singh with the income of the ancestral villages of the family were purchased in the name of Gulab Singh. During Gulab Singh's life-time his wife Kanchan Kunwar must have occupied a position of some importance in the family, and after her husband's death she doubtless wished to manage her own affairs independently of any interference by her husband's relations.

It has not been asserted in argument before their Lordships in this case, or, so far as they are aware, in any case before the Board, and they believe that it could not with truth be asserted before an Indian Court, that a widow of a soulless prominent member of a Hindu joint family is never allowed by the family to occupy possession of some of the family's land for her life for her maintenance. Their Lordships find that Kanchan Kunwar obtained possession of the lands in question under that agreement of compromise for her life for her maintenance, and not in any right of hers as Gulab Singh's widow. The agreement of compromise was an oral agreement, but there is documentary evidence which is only consistent with such an agreement, and to some of that documentary evidence reference will now be made.

During Gulab Singh's life-time his name had been entered in the revenue papers as that of the owner in possession of shares in some villages, and the names of his cousins Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh had been entered in the revenue papers as the names of the owners in possession of shares in the same or other villages. When Gulab Singh died it was necessary that application for mutation of names should be made to the revenue authority of each village in the revenue papers of which his name had been entered as the owner of a share or shares. Such applications are made by or on behalf of the person or persons claiming to be entitled to the share or shares of the deceased share-holder, and when opposed an inquiry is held by an official of the revenue authority.

MUST. BHAGWANI KUNWAR v. MOHAN SINGH.

An application for mutation of names was made on Gulab Singh's death in the case of each village in which his name was entered in the revenue papers as the holder of a share. Those applications were made by Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh, and as Kanchan Kunwar was known to be a claimant for mutation of name her deposition was taken. Their Lordships will now refer, by way of illustration, to what happened in the case of the village of Aurangpur Gahdewa, in respect of which the name of Gulab Singh was entered in the settlement khewat of 1873 as the owner of an eight-anna share.

"No. 741C.—APPLICATION OF BAHADUR SINGH, ETC.

"Name of village—Aurangpur Gahdewa, pargana Bilhour. Head—mutation on the ground of succession.

"Substance.—Application for expungement of the name of Gulab Singh, deceased, and entry of the names of Bahadur Singh, Diwan Singh and Nawaz Singh, cousins, in respect of an 8-anna zamindari share under sec. 97, Act No 19 of 1873

"SHOWETH.—

"That Gulab Singh, zamindar of an 8-anna share in village Aurangpur Gahdewa, pargana Bilhour, died on the 7th of Aghhan Sudi, Sambat 1942. These three cousins, Bahadur Singh, Nawaz Singh and Diwan Singh, are the heirs in possession of the property of the deceased in equal shares. He has left no issue besides these applicants. It is, therefore, prayed that the name of the deceased may be removed from, and those of these heirs entered in, the public records.

"PETITIONERS.—Bahadur Singh, Diwan Singh and Nawaz Singh, heirs of Gulab Singh, zamindar of village Aurangpur Gahdewa, pargana Bilhour. Dated the 12th February 1887.

"Filed by Diwan Singh and written by Ram Narayan.

“(Sd.) DIWAN SINGH, in autograph.

"This application was made to-day by Diwan Singh.

"Held—Let the Registrar Kanungo first make a report as to the correctness of the share. 12th February, 1887.

"Signature of Naib-Tahsildar."

The application is in the vernacular. The term which has been translated as "heirs" must mean not heirs in the English acceptance of the term but the persons who claimed as surviving co-sharers of Gulab Singh to have their names entered.

On the 4th April 1887, Kanchan Kunwar made her deposition before the Kanungo. So far as is material it was as follows :—

"Gulab Singh, my husband, the zamindar of mauza Aurangpur Gahdewa, pargana Bilhour, died a natural death, four months ago. The deceased left no son. Regarding the entry of name in respect of the property left by the deceased husband, some points have been agreed to be settled between Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Nawaz Singh and me. For the settlement of the same I have sent for Jagannath Singh, my son-in-law, from mauza Katra, district Banda. On his arrival, the points will be settled mutually in a week and then my general-attorney, Roshan Lal, will present himself and will make statement about the mutation of names in this case. So long as the points are not settled mutually, I cannot make any statement about the entry of name in respect of the property of the deceased."

Subsequently Musammat Kanchan Kunwar made another deposition in the presence of the Kanungo in relation to entering the names in respect of Aurangpur Gahdewa, which, as translated, was, so far as is material, as follows :—

"The points which were to be settled between Diwan Singh and others and me have all been settled and, under the mutual agreement, the entire property left by my deceased husband in mauza Aurangpur Gahdewa, pargana Bilhour, has been allotted to me and put in my possession. Therefore, the name of the deceased may be struck off and my name entered in respect of the entire property left by the deceased in the said village. Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh, the heirs of the deceased, have no connection with the property in the said village in my life-time.

"Signature of Qanungo."

The words "Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh, the heirs of the deceased, have no connection with the property in the said village in my life-time" can only mean that Kanchan Kunwar was allowed to be in possession for her life for her maintenance. The learned Judges of the High Court in their judgment observed in reference to that deposition of Kanchan Kunwar:—

"It may be remembered that there is always a reluctance among members of a Hindu family to confer on female members an absolute interest in property belonging to their husbands or fathers, and had it been intended that Kanchan Kunwar was to have an absolute interest in the property which was to be recorded in her name, that fact would have been distinctly stated in the depositions not only of Kanchan Kunwar herself, but also of the male members of the family whose statements were also recorded in the mutation proceedings. We are, therefore, unable to hold that Kanchan Kunwar acquired an absolute interest under the compromise which was effected after the death of Gulab Singh."

Musammat Kanchan got possession of the shares in the villages in question under that agreement of compromise and she never had any other right or title to them, and she could not under the circumstances obtain against the co-sharers of the joint family any title by prescription. It has, however, been suggested in this appeal that she had acquired a title by prescription. Whether she acted in accordance with that agreement of compromise or contrary to it is immaterial; she had no other title to the villages in question and could grant or convey no title of any kind to the villages which would be effective for any purpose beyond the term of her own life.

Musammat Kanchan Kunwar, as appears by her deposition of the 4th April 1887, wished to consult her son-in-law Jagannath Singh on the subject of the agreement of compromise. As will now appear, her son-in-law, Jagannath Singh, who was a Defendant in this suit and is now dead, but is represented by his son Sheorakham Singh, must have had with his wife Bhagwani Kunwar, who was Kanchan Kunwar's daughter, much influence over Kanchan Kunwar. On the 12th May 1892, Musammat Kanchan Kunwar by a deed purported to give the eight-anna share in the village Auria to her daughter Bhagwani Kunwar. In that deed Musammat Kanchan Kunwar asserted that on the death of Gulab Singh she had entered into proprietary possession of the eight-anna share, and that on her death her daughter "would succeed to the whole of the estate of my husband Gulab Singh under the Hindu law."

Their Lordships may here observe that Kanchan Kunwar, in a written statement which she had filed in Court on the 26th January 1888, in a suit in which she was a Defendant, had alleged that "the property of Gulab Singh deceased was taken by Bahadur Singh, Diwan Singh and Niwaz Singh, and they became liable for the entire amount payable and for collection of the outstanding debts, while this Defendant got for her maintenance the shares in the zamindari property specified at the foot. In those circumstances the Defendant and the shares specified at the foot should be exempted." At the foot of her written statement she specified the shares in the six villages in question in this suit, including the eight-anna share in mauza Auria.

On the 12th August 1892, Musammat Kanchan Kunwar executed a deed of mortgage in favour of her son-in-law, Jagannath Singh, by which she purported to mortgage all the rest of the property of which she had been allowed under the agreement of compromise to take possession for her life for her maintenance. In that deed she asserted that all the properties she was mortgaging "are up to this time owned and possessed by me as proprietor without the participation of any one else, and I have no co-sharer or coparcener therein." On that mortgage Jagannath Singh brought a suit for foreclosure on the 14th February 1907, against Musammat Kanchan Kunwar, and on the 7th March 1907, obtained a decree for foreclosure. On the 15th November 1907, that decree for foreclosure was made absolute. Their Lordships have no hesitation in finding that the deed of gift of the 12th May 1892, the mortgage of the 12th August 1892, and the suit for foreclosure of the 14th February 1907, were all collusive and fraudulent, and were intended to make evidence that Musammat Kanchan Kunwar had held the lands in dispute as absolutely her own with as complete a right to dispose of them as a Hindu separated childless man might have to dispose of his self-acquired property. Musammat Kanchan Kunwar, her daughter and her son-in-law must have known perfectly well that she had no right to make the deed of gift or the mortgage.

As their Lordships have already mentioned, the Subordinate Judge in his judgment, which was delivered on the 30th November 1916, found that Gulab Singh was separate at the time of his death, and the High Court found on appeal that there had been no separation. Gulab Singh had died twenty-eight years before the suit was instituted, and on the question whether the family had been joint or separate in 1886 each Court had to rely mainly on such documentary evidence as had been produced. It appears to their Lordships from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that he had been much influenced in finding that Gulab Singh was separate when he died from the fact that Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh had not given evidence in the suit. He must have forgotten that it had been proved on the 15th March 1916, by Mohan Singh that his father Bahadur Singh was 79 or 80 years old, and was quite helpless or unable to give evidence, and that his uncle Niwaz Singh was 76 or 77 years old, and that his tongue was paralysed and he was unable to speak or make a statement. The Subordinate Judge was also very much influenced in his finding by the fact that the day-books, also referred to as cash-books, which contained the family accounts had only been produced, and that the ledgers which had been kept by the family had not been produced, and he obviously did not accept as reliable the evidence as to what had become of the ledgers. The explanation of the non-production of the ledgers was given by Mohan Singh, who, when he gave his evidence, was 49 years old and could not have been more than 17 years old when Gulab Singh died. This is how Mohan Singh explained why the ledgers had not been produced:—

"I have not filed the ledgers of all the day-books filed by me inasmuch as they are not with me. I brought them to file them in the Court at Cawnpore. The said ledger was kept in the house of Manmunno Babu and Karan Babu. Manmunno Babu is elder and Karan Babu is younger. I used to keep all my luggage and papers in a room of those very persons, i.e., Manmunno Babu and Karan Babu. The house of Manmunno Babu and Karan Babu fell down owing to heavy rain this year in the month of Bhadon and consequently those ledgers got buried under the same house. Those ledgers were kept in two 'bastas.' I did not make a search for them in my house. The ledgers which got buried were kept by me in the room of Manmunno Babu and Karan Babu in 1904. The account-books and the papers which were filed by me in the case instituted in 1904 and taken back from the Court were kept by me in that very house of Manmunno Babu, three or four years ago. The papers which were filed by me in the case instituted in 1904 were the same papers as were taken out of the room of Manmunno Babu and filed in this case. I did not file the ledgers in this case because they had become rotten. (Subsequently the witness stated:) When the case was instituted they were not rotten. Now this year in the month of Bhadon and Kunwar when the house fell down on account of heavy rain they were rotten."

That is not an impossible explanation and it may be true. The High Court considered Mohan Singh's explanation as far from satisfactory, but Sir Grimwood Mears, C. J., and Mr. Justice Banerji, who heard the appeal in the High Court, stated in their judgment that "the absence of the ledgers does not, in our opinion, detract from the value of the entries in the cash-books to which we have referred." The learned Counsel who argued this appeal on behalf of the Appellants commented strongly on the non-production of the ledgers and contended that if they had been produced they would have shown that the family had separated. What the ledgers would have shown if they had been produced their Lordships do not know, but the entries in the family cash-books which were put in evidence are clear and unambiguous, and point to the only legitimate conclusion that the accounts were the accounts of a joint family.

The main contention of the learned Counsel for the Appellants was that the entries of the names of the owners in possession of the shares in the villages which were made at the settlement of 1873 should be regarded as conclusive on the question as to whether Gulab Singh, Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh were joint or separate, and at great length he drew their Lordships' attention to those entries. From those entries it appears that at the settlement of 1873 Gulab Singh was the owner in possession of shares in certain villages, but whether it may be inferred from those entries or from any of them that he was the separate or sole owner of any of the shares is quite another matter. Their Lordships will now give some examples from village khewats of the settlement of 1873 to show how the names of co-sharers were entered as the owners of shares. In doing so they will omit particulars which are immaterial. In the settlement khewat of mauza Aurangpur Gahdewa of 1873 the entry is "Name of lambardar, Gulab Singh; names of co-sharers, Gulab Singh, son of Madho Singh, Thakur Gaur, gotra Barduaj, resident of Baranpur Kanjri, pargana Sheorajpur; Amount of share, 8 annas; Remarks, This is owned by a single man." The entry in the settlement khewat of 1873 of mauza Baranpur Kanjri is "Names of sharers . . . Gulab Singh, son of Madho Singh, half, and Bahadur Singh, Dewan Singh and Niwaz Singh, sons of Hira Singh in equal shares  $\frac{1}{2}$ ," and bracketed opposite that particular entry is " $\frac{1}{2}$ rd. . . ." The entry in the settlement khewat of 1873 of mauza Baranpur is "Names of co-sharers, Gulab Singh, son of Madho Singh, caste Thakur Gawr, resident of Baranpur Kanjri, 10 pie, 1 ffs, 7 kirant, 2 jau, 4 tund, 9 dant, and Bahadur Singh, Dewan Singh and Niwaz Singh, sons of Hira Singh, caste and residence as aforesaid, 5 pies, 4 ffs," and as to the "shamlat" of the mauza the entry is "... Gulab Singh, the amount of the ancestral share being 5 pies, 4 ffs, and Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh, in equal shares, 5 pies, 4 ffs. . . ." The entry in the settlement khewat of 1873 of mauza Siurajpur is "Names of 'lambardars,' Gulab Singh and Ram Sahai 'lambardar;' Names of co-sharers, Gulab Singh, son of Madho Singh, caste and residence as mentioned above, 11 pies, 8 ffs, 9 kirants, 7 jaus, 2 tunds and 5 dants. Bahadur Singh, Diwan Singh and Niwaz Singh, sons of Hira Singh, caste and residence as aforesaid, in equal shares, 5 pies and 4 ffs. . . ." The entry in the settlement khewat of 1873 of mauza Mau is "Name of lambardar, Sheo Charan Lal and Niwaz Singh, lambardars; Names of co-sharers, Niwaz Singh, Bahadur Singh and Dewan Singh," sons of Hira Singh, caste Thakur Gaur, 'gotra' Bharduaj; residents of Baranpur Kanjri, pargana Sheorajpur, in equal shares, 5 annas, 4 pies." Remarks . . . Niwaz Singh lives jointly with his two brothers. No adjustment of account is made . . . Their Lordships do not draw from the above entries or from any other similar entries which were made in the revenue settlement of 1873 to which they were referred by the learned Counsel any inference that Gulab Singh had separated from his cousins Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh, and Niwaz Singh, or that there had been any separation in the joint family. But if the learned Counsel's prolonged argument on the entries was in any way sound, Gulab Singh must have separated from his cousins before the settlement of 1873 was held.

MUST. BHAGWANT KUNWAR v. MOHAN SINGH.

In Nageshar Bakhsh Singh v. Ganesha (1), in an appeal from Oudh, in which the learned Counsel already referred to had argued the case for the Appellant then before the Board, it was in that case decided by the Board that a definition of shares in revenue and village papers, by itself, affords a very slight indication of an actual separation in a Hindu family, and is insufficient to prove, contrary to the presumption of law, that the family to which the entries refer had separated. In the judgment delivered in that case by the Board, the Board referred with approval to a judgment of Birdwood, J., of the High Court at Bombay, in Bhagoji v. Bapuji (2), that "at the hearing the lower Appellate Court should have its attention directed to the ruling in Fatma v. Darya Sahib (3) in which it was held that the collector's book is kept for purposes of revenue and not for purposes of title. The fact of a person's name being entered in the collector's book as occupant of land does not necessarily of itself establish that person's title or defeat the title of any other person." The same observation appears to their Lordships to apply to entries of the names of persons in settlement khewats as the names of co-sharers in a mauza.

Immediately following the quotation in reference to the judgment of Birdwood, J., the Board in the case of Nageshar Bakhsh Singh v. Ganesha (1) said: "The Board refer in particular to the judgment of Sir John Edge in Gajendar

MUST. BHAGWANI KUNWAR v. MOHAN SINGH.

Singh v. Sardar Singh (4). In their opinion the statements of principle now to be quoted are of significance and are sound as applied not only in Allahabad, but in India as a whole. The main proposition is, of course, widely familiar—namely, that ‘given a joint Hindu family, the presumption is, until the contrary is proved, that the family continues joint. That presumption is peculiarly strong in the case of the sons of one father.’ The learned Judge further refers to ‘experience of the manner in which names of Hindus are entered not uncommonly in ‘revenue’ and village papers in respect of shares;’ and the Board sees no reason to differ from, but approves of, his pronouncement to the following effect: ‘A definition of shares in revenue and village papers affords, by itself, but a very slight indication of an actual separation in a Hindu family, and certainly in no case that has ever come before us could we have regarded such a definition of shares standing alone as sufficient evidence upon which to find, contrary to the presumption in law as to jointure, that the family to which such a definition referred had separated.’ ”

This Board cannot read Act XIX of 1873, the North-Western Provinces Land-Revenue Act, 1873, which applied to the settlement of 1873, as making the definition of the shares of co-sharers in a settlement khewat conclusive of a separation in a joint Hindu family.

If an actual partition of the joint family property by Madho Singh and Hira Singh, or by Gulab Singh and his cousins Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh, had been proved, it would be evidence that they had altered their title to it as joint owners and had become separate owners; but a mere definition of shares in revenue and village papers, unless it was proved that such definition of shares was with a view to a then partition, would not, in their Lordships’ opinion, by itself be conclusive evidence even that an actual partition was then intended.

The attention of their Lordships has been drawn to the matters from which the Subordinate Judge and the High Court drew different conclusions on the question whether Gulab Singh had died as separate from his cousins Diwan Singh, Bahadur Singh and Niwaz Singh, and they agree with the High Court and its reasons for finding that there had not been any separation. Those reasons with which their Lordships agree are epitomised by the High Court in the concluding paragraph of the High Court judgment, and are as follows:—

“Upon a consideration of the case as a whole and of the evidence which has been adduced by the parties, we have come to the conclusion that all the indicia of a joint Hindu family are present in this case. There was first of all the nucleus of joint ancestral property which belonged to Padam Singh. There is next the presumption of Hindu law that the sons of Padam Singh, who originally must have been joint, continued to be joint so long as they lived, until the contrary was shown. No evidence has been given to prove that they ever separated or that after their death a separation took place between Gulab Singh and the sons of Hira Singh. We have then the facts that property was acquired sometimes in the name of one member and sometimes in the name of another; that debts incurred in the name of one member were discharged by another, that debts were incurred and mortgages were taken in the names of members of both branches jointly; that a common account was kept relating to the income and expenditure of the family; that in these accounts the expenses of funerals and of religious and other ceremonies connected with different members of the family were jointly entered; that there were common servants who made collections and otherwise served all the members of both branches; that the affairs of the family were looked after by the different members, whether the property stood in the name of any particular member or not; and that there is nothing to prove that an actual separation ever took place. In view of all these circumstances we are unable to hold that the family was a separate family and to agree with the conclusion of the Court below. In our opinion it has been satisfactorily established that the family of the sons of Padam Singh was a joint family at the time of Gulab Singh's death, so that upon the death of Gulab Singh's widow the property in dispute passed to the Appellants, the surviving male members of the family."

The Appellants in the High Court were the Plaintiffs.

SANDERSON, C. J.
O. C. GHOSE, J.
BUCKLAND, J.
19, June.

In the matter of two ATTORNEYS.

Attorney, disciplinary jurisdiction over—Breach of duty by attorney, not involving moral turpitude—Attorney's duty as officer of Court and to his client—Incorporated Law Society, action by, to bring the matter to the attention of the Court—Competence of the Society.

An attorney obtained Rs. 3,250 from the Sheriff on the express understanding that the money was due to the landlord, a certain charitable trust, for a godown rented by his client for 10 months at

Rs. 325 per month, to keep furniture attached before judgment on behalf of his client, but instead of paying the full amount to the trust, the attorney paid the money to his client for payment to the trust, but subsequently upon instruction from his client wrote to the trust denying liability in the matter on the ground that his client did not engage the godown but that as a matter of grace, on instruction from his client, he was sending Rs. 474 which his client considered was a very handsome donation to charity:

Held—That the attorney ought not to have made himself a party to the course adopted by his client by addressing the letter to the trust, but should have insisted on the client paying the money to the trust or refunding it to the Sheriff. Being an officer of the Court, he owed a duty to the Court as well as to his client. There was a breach of duty, which the attorney owed to the Court, though his conduct did not involve any moral turpitude

Held further—That when the matter was brought to the notice of the Incorporated Law Society, it was competent to and proper for the Society to bring the matter to the attention of the Court.

This was a Rule nisi obtained by the Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta, calling upon two attorneys to show cause why their names should not be struck off the rolls of attorneys of this Court or why they should not be suspended from practising as such attorneys till such time as this Court might deem fit. On 12th February 1925, one of the trustees of the Parsi Charitable Fund wrote a letter to the President, Incorporated Law Society complaining against the attorneys, the material allegations whereof were that the attorneys in question had withdrawn a sum of Rs. 3,250 from the Sheriff on the express understanding that the amount was to be paid to the trust as rent of a godown which had been hired from the trust, but that when the trust asked the attorneys to make the payment they had sent a cheque for Rs. 474 repudiating liability for any amount but offering to pay the same as a matter of grace, the same being in their client's opinion a very handsome donation to the charity. The said sum of Rs. 474 was stated to be the balance of the moneys realised by the sale of the furniture which having been attached before judgment on behalf of the client had been kept in the godown rented from the trust, "after deducting expenses he (the client) had been put to."

The Council of the Society considered the matter at a meeting and they were not "satisfied that this conduct of the attorneys was in blameless conformity with the standard of conduct prevalent in the profession of attorneys." The Honorary Secretary of the Society asked for an explanation from the said attorneys, and the reply was: "If any statement made by Mr. Gora through us in our letter of the 21st of May 1924 is considered inconsistent with any statement made by us on his behalf in our letter of the 9th of May 1924, that is a matter for Mr. Gora to explain when called upon to do so. It is no part of our business to reconcile the consistency or inconsistency of statements made by a client."

On receipt of this reply the Council reconsidered the matter and on the 13th March 1925 through its Secretary enquired whether any steps had been taken by the attorneys to obtain from their client the restoration of the money drawn for him by them. The answer was as follows:—

"We are to-day in receipt of your letter of yesterday's date and we fail to appreciate the purpose of your interference in this matter and your letters to us on the subject."

As we have pointed out the dispute is one between Mr. Sakloth and Mr. Gora two Parsi gentlemen neither of whom belongs to our profession. The Sheriff held certain money which was payable to Mr. Gora and at Mr. Gora's request we obtained it for him and paid it to him as shown by the receipt we have sent you. There was no occasion for us to take any steps to obtain from our client restoration of money that belonged to him as suggested by you. And may we enquire on whose behalf you suggest we should have applied for restoration of the money and to whom it should have been restored?

The academic question with which your letter closes, however interesting it may be to your Council, has nothing whatever to do with this case but our answer to it is the answer which any gentlemen among you would give to the same question. May we add that we regard the question as an impertinence and resent it as such."

Under cl. 38 (d) of the Articles of Association of the Incorporated Law Society the matter was brought before the Court and the Rule nisi was granted.

The first attorney denied in his affidavit that he was guilty of any breach of faith either to the Court or to the Sheriff and that he failed in his duty as an attorney. The letter dated 21st May 1924 to the trustees was written in accordance with his client's instructions. The second attorney alleged that he had nothing whatsoever to do with the matter though he was a partner of the first attorney in the firm.

Mr. N. N. Sircar (with Mr. B. K. Ghosh) appeared for the Society.

In the matter of two ATTORNEYS.

Mr. L. P. E. Pugh (with Mr. T. Ameer Ali) appeared for the first Attorney.

Mr. H. D. Bose (with Mr. R. Westmacott) appeared for the second Attorney.

Mr. Pugh.—I will not take any objection but I should point out that the Incorporated Law Society here have not the same status as the Incorporated Law Society in England. The English Society could take action itself but here the Society was a sort of common informer.

Mr. Sircar.—On the materials before the Court there is no doubt that the attorneys are guilty of improper conduct.

[BUCKLAND, J.—Mr. Sircar, you should formulate definite charges against the attorneys.]

Mr. Sircar.—The charges are that it was improper conduct on the part of the attorneys to make over money to a client in such a way that he is enabled to deal with it otherwise than in accordance with law. It was the duty of the attorneys to have an undertaking from the client for returning whatever money was not wanted for the purpose for which it was taken and lastly, when attorneys obtained money from Court as officers of the Court on the representations that it was required for payment of rent, it was not proper to pay a small sum by way of charity. These are the charges the Incorporated Law Society is making against the attorneys. I will leave the matter with your Lordships for any action you might take under the circumstances.

Mr. Pugh.—The matter is an extremely simple one and but for the somewhat acrimonious correspondence between the parties would not have come to Court.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Look at the letter dated 21st.

Mr. Pugh.—I have never known that disciplinary proceedings would be taken for writing a letter.

BUCKLAND, J.—That is not the point.

SANDERSON, C. J.—It must have been understood that the client was to pay the landlord. Surely it was the duty of the attorneys to point that out to the client.]

Mr. Pugh.—It does not occur to me in that way.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I am surprised how the attorney came to write that. The best that the attorneys can do is to state that a mistake was made and that they will rectify the position.

GHOSE, J.—What is there to prevent their saying that they made a mistake as to the course which was adopted and that they will refund the money to the Sheriff.]*

Mr. Pugh.—My client admits that they made a mistake as to the course adopted by them and that they will undertake to refund the money to the Sheriff. My clients express their regret for what has happened.

Mr. Sircar.—There is one other thing to which I will refer. The attorneys used the word "impertinence" in their letter, dated 14th March 1925, to the Incorporated Law Society but if they withdraw that I will not ask for costs against them.

[GHOSE, J.—Why should not your clients withdraw that?]

Mr. Pugh.—It is very foolish to quarrel with words, but if your Lordship so thinks I withdraw the word.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I do not understand why you say, "If your Lordship thinks." Your clients withdraw or they do not.]

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule which was issued against two attorneys of the Court and which was based upon allegations contained in a petition, presented by the President of the Incorporated Law Society, Calcutta.

In the matter of two ATTORNEYS.

In view of the course, which has been adopted by the learned Counsel, who appeared for the attorney, whose name stands first on the record, it is possible for me to deal with this matter shortly.

It appears that one Gora, the Plaintiff in a suit of Gora v. Templeton, instituted in the High Court, obtained an attachment of certain furniture before judgment.

The furniture was in some premises in Calcutta which were rented at about Rs. 600 per month. Apparently it was thought desirable on the part of the Plaintiff that the furniture should be removed to premises which could be obtained at a less rental. The result was, that by an arrangement made by or on behalf of the Plaintiff and the person representing a certain trust, the furniture was removed to and stored at premises belonging to the trust, namely, 84, Dhurumtolla Street.

The Sheriff, who had attached the furniture, had nothing to do with this arrangement.

The furniture was lying in the premises 84, Dhurumtolla Street for about ten months and was then sold. The proceeds of the sale were in the hands of the Sheriff. A claim was then made by the owners of the premises upon the Plaintiff for rent at the rate of Rs. 325 per month.

The attorneys, against whom this rule was issued and who were acting for the Plaintiff, wrote to the Sheriff on the 9th of May 1924 as follows:—"Perhaps you may remember that our client rented the premises No. 84, Dhurumtolla Street for storing the furniture attached herein and the landlord has submitted his bill at Rs. 325 per month. We shall be much obliged if you will kindly send us your cheque for Rs. 3,250 out of sale proceeds to enable our client to discharge the liability. We enclose herewith a copy of the said bill."

Accordingly a cheque for Rs. 3,250 was sent to the attorneys by the Sheriff and a receipt was given dated the 13th of May. The terms of the receipt were as follows:—"Received from the Sheriff of Calcutta by cheque No. 61 on the Imperial Bank of India the sum of Rupees (3,250-0-0) three thousand two hundred and fifty only being the rent of the premises No. 84, Dhurumtolla Street from November 1922 to August 1923 in the above cause."

The cheque or its equivalent was handed by the attorneys to their client and they obtained a receipt from him in these terms: "Received from (the attorneys) the sum of Rs. 3,250 being amount realized by them from the Sheriff of Calcutta for payment of rent of premises No. 84, Dhurumtolla Street which I undertake to settle with the landlord."

It seems clear that the sum of Rs. 3,250 was obtained by the attorneys from the Sheriff upon the representation that the money was due to the landlords of 84, Dhurumtolla Street, for the rent of the premises and that if it were received from the Sheriff it would be paid in full to the landlords.

When the attorneys handed the money to their client I have no doubt that it was expected that the client would pay the amount in full to the landlords. I think that is obviously the meaning of the receipt which the Plaintiff gave to the attorneys.

It turned out however that the attorneys' client did not propose to pay the Rs. 3,250 to the landlords.

In the matter of two ATTORNEYS.

In my opinion, it was then the duty of the member of the firm of attorneys, who had this matter in hand, to have told his client in effect: "You must either pay this money (3,250) to the landlord in full or the money must be returned to the Sheriff."

Instead of that being done the attorney, upon the instructions of his client, wrote to the trustees of the Society a letter, the material part of which is as follows:— "Our client is informed by the Sheriff that you have sent in a bill to him in respect of the rent of the premises and he tells us that the Sheriff repudiates all liability in the matter on the ground that he did not engage the premises. Our client also denies liability on the ground that he did not engage them but as a matter of grace he instructs us to send you as we do herewith a cheque for Rs. 474, the balance remaining in his hands out of the monies realized by the sale after deducting the expenses he has been put to. Our client considers this sum a very handsome donation to charity in the circumstances."

In my judgment, that is a letter which ought not to have been written and the attorney ought not to have made himself a party to the course adopted by his client. The money had been obtained from the Sheriff on the express understanding that the money was due to the owners of the premises and that the whole amount would be paid to them in respect of the rent of the premises. But for that representation the money would not have been paid to the attorney by the Sheriff. Having regard to the way in which the money was obtained from the Sheriff and the purpose for which it was obtained, apart from other considerations, it is clear that the Plaintiff in this suit was not entitled to retain the balance in his hands. The attorney, being an officer of the Court, owed a duty to the Court, as well as to his client, and in my judgment the attorney made a serious mistake in the course which was adopted. If the money was not to be used for the payment of the rent, it should have been returned to the Sheriff. The learned Counsel, who appeared for the attorney, has stated that the attorney now recognises that a serious mistake was made.

It is not suggested that there was any moral turpitude on the part of the attorney: I am of opinion however that there was a breach of the duty which the attorney owed to the Court.

I understand that at some date, subsequent to the above-mentioned letter, the Plaintiff sent a cheque for Rs. 800 to the owner of the premises but that sum was not accepted and the cheque was not cashed. The result is that at present no part of the Rs. 3,250 has been used for the payment of the rent. The attorney, through his learned Counsel, has undertaken to return the sum of Rs. 3,250 to the Sheriff to-day, and, through his learned Counsel he has expressed his regret for the mistake, which was made.

In these circumstances and in view of the above-mentioned undertaking, my learned brothers and I are of opinion that with regard to the first attorney, on the record, it is not necessary for this Court to take any further steps or to make any order in respect of the Rule, which accordingly is discharged.

With regard to the second attorney on the record, it is clear that at the time when the material incidents of this case occurred, he was not in India and he was in no way responsible for the matters, upon which the Rule was based. If that act had been known to the Court at the time the application for the Rule was made, I feel sure that the Rule would not have been issued in his case. In the case of the second attorney on the record, therefore, the Rule is discharged.

The learned Counsel who appeared for the Incorporated Law Society stated that if the first attorney would withdraw certain passages in the correspondence to which objection was taken, the Law Society would not ask for costs. The passages have now been withdrawn. Consequently we make no order as to costs.

There remains one more matter to which I must refer having regard to certain remarks which were made by the learned Counsel who appeared for the first attorney on the record, with regard to the action which was taken by the Incorporated Law Society.

My learned brothers and I are of opinion that when the matter, which we have been considering, was brought to the notice of the Incorporated Law Society, it was competent to and proper for the Society to bring the matter to the attention of the Court.

No. 95 of 1924.

NAGENDRA NATH ROY

Nos. 1 to 3, Appellants,

v.

JUGAL KISHORE ROY

Respondents.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), secs 69, 70—Suit for contribution—Deposit made by Plaintiff to prevent execution sale of property in which he erroneously believed he had interest—Deposit by permission of Court—Right to reimbursement—Principles governing such cases.

The Plaintiff sued for contribution in respect of payment made by him to save from sale in execution of a decree a property, in which the Plaintiff claimed he had an interest along with the Defendant. The payment had been made with the permission of the Court which had expressly found that the Plaintiff had the right to make the payment:

Held—That though the Plaintiff failed to prove that he had a share in the property, that did not dispose of the question as to the applicability of sec. 69 of the Contract Act:

Where payment is made by a person who puts forward a bona fide claim to the property in dispute he is entitled to the protection afforded by sec. 69 of the Contract Act, even though it ultimately transpires as a result of litigation that he had not in fact or in law the interest for the protection whereof the payment was made.

That in the circumstances of the case the Plaintiff should succeed on the provisions of sec. 69 of the Contract Act.

That even assuming that sec. 69 did not apply the case came within sec. 70 of the Contract Act.

NAGENDRA NATH ROY v. JUGAL KISHORE ROY.

Sec. 70 lays down three circumstances as necessary to found the right of demand, viz., 1st, that the act should be lawfully done for another, 2nd, that it should not be the doer's intention to do it gratuitously and, 3rd, that the other party should enjoy the benefit of it.

The existence of an interest is generally a test as to the lawful character of a payment but even if an interest were not shown to exist payments on account of another, if lawfully made, would generally be provided for by sec. 70 of the Act.

That all the circumstances required by sec. 70 existed in the case and the Plaintiff was entitled to be reimbursed.

It is necessary to be very circumspect in the application of the general principle of justice, equity and good conscience, but the terms of sec. 70 are wide enough to afford ample room for the application of this principle in a fit case.

This was an appeal preferred on the 26th February 1924, against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Asansole in Burdwan (Babu Nalini, Kanta Bose), dated the 16th January 1924.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Bankim Chandra Mukerjee and Babu Charu Chandra Ganguly, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Nath Ghoshal for the minor Respondent.

Babu Krishna Kishore Basak for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MUKERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for contribution instituted on the allegation that the Plaintiff and the Defendants who are governed by the Mitakshara law were the lessees of a colliery named the Palashdiha colliery; that the landlords obtained a decree for arrears of rent in respect of the said colliery and brought to sale another colliery named the Lachipur colliery belonging to them in execution of the said decree, that the father of the Appellants, that is to say, the Defendant No. 1 Ashutosh Roy, purchased the same in the name of his son Nagendra Nath Roy, the first Appellant, that the Plaintiff's mother, as guardian of the Plaintiff, in order to save the property deposited Rs. 3,771-0-6 p. with the permission of the Court and had the sale set aside, and that therefore the Plaintiff is entitled to recover the said amount, together with costs of the deposit and interest amounting in all to Rs. 6,081-8 annas 6 pies.

The Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who are the father and the uncle of the Plaintiff admitted the Plaintiff's claim and the Defendants Nos. 4 to 6 compromised the case with him. The only contesting Defendant was the Defendant No. 1, the father of the present Appellants. The defence of this Defendant was that the parties were not governed by the Mitakshara law, that the Plaintiff had no share in the property and so was not interested in making the payment, that the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 really made the payment in the name of the Plaintiff and that the payment was a voluntary one, and consequently the Plaintiff was not entitled to be reimbursed.

The learned Subordinate Judge has granted the Plaintiff a decree as against the Appellants for a half of the amount of Rs. 3,571-0-6 p. and also of Rs. 50, together with interest and costs, the said half representing the Appellant's 8 annas share in the property. He has also passed a decree against the Defendants

NAGENDRA NATH ROY v. JUGAL KISHORE ROY.

Nos. 2 and 3 on their own admission for an amount proportionate to their share. Against this decree the present appeal has been preferred.

The first objection urged on behalf of the Appellants is to the effect that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the parties are governed by the Mitakshara law. On this point the evidence is very scanty on either side and what is there on the record is exceedingly conflicting. All that is proved in this case is that the parties are Chhatris by caste, and it follows from this fact that at some time or other they must have migrated from outside Bengal. When this migration took place or where the ancestors of the parties came from, it is not possible to ascertain. It is proved that the parties are related to the Roys of Palashdighi and it is said that the latter claimed to be governed by the Mitakshara law, but it has been shown on the other hand that they failed to establish the claim. An up-country Misra Brahmin is said to be the priest of the family, but his services are availed of only on more important occasions and on other occasions Bengali priests officiate. This is all the evidence and in my opinion it is wholly insufficient for discharging the burden which undoubtedly lies on the Plaintiff, who as well as the Defendants are inhabitants of Bengal, to prove that they are governed by the Mitakshara law.

The Respondent urges that the Appellants are not entitled to re-open and re-agitate the question in view of the fact that when the Respondent put in the money, the pleader for the auction-purchaser Nagendra Nath Roy, who is the Appellant No. 1, stated that he had no instruction to oppose the making of the deposit. To this, however, the answer is that the Appellant Nagendra Nath Roy has been brought on the records of this case, not in his capacity as 'auction-purchaser but as one of the heirs of Ashutosh Roy who was one of the judgment-debtors in the decree in execution of which the sale took place, and Nagendra Nath Roy was not present in those proceedings in his present capacity as representative of the deceased judgment-debtor and moreover it does not appear that any of the judgment-debtors under the said decree had notice of the deposit that was about to be made. Under the circumstances I am of opinion that the Appellants are not precluded from urging that the parties are not governed by the Mitakshara law. In my judgment the Plaintiff has failed to prove that he had in fact any interest in the property. The learned Subordinate Judge has allowed the Plaintiff's claim under sec. 69 of the Contract Act, on the ground that he had an interest in the payment of the money as he had a share in the property that had been sold, but in this finding of fact I am unable to agree. This however does not dispose of the question as to the applicability of sec. 69, for it has been laid down in a series of cases that where payment is made by a person who puts forward a bond fide claim to the property in dispute he is entitled to the protection afforded by sec. 69 of the Contract Act, even though it ultimately transpires, as a result of litigation, that he had not in fact or in law the interest, for the protection whereof the payment was made [Bindubasini Dasi v. Harendra Lall Roy (1) and Radhamadhab Samonta v. Sashtiram Sen (2)]. This extended view of the expression "in-interested in the payment of the money" has been adopted in consonance with the exposition of the law embodied in sec. 69 of the Contract Act to the effect that the expression is comprehensive enough to include cases of apprehension of any kind of loss or inconvenience, and is not restricted to cases of individuals, who are sure to suffer actual detriment assessable in money value. Sec. 69 of the Indian Contract Act lays down that "A person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other."

NAGENDRA NATH ROY v. JUGAL KISHORE ROY.

In a suit under this section it is essential that there should be firstly a person who is bound by law to make a certain payment, secondly, another person who is interested in such payment being made, and thirdly, a payment by such last-mentioned person. If these circumstances exist, the fiction of an implied request from the Defendant to the Plaintiff to make the payment may be properly imported into the case so as to bring it within the section, and thus, the right to reimbursement is created.

A debt for money paid arises where a person has paid money for another under circumstances and upon occasions which make it just and equitable that it should be repaid; a debt or promise to pay is then implied in law, without any actual agreement to that effect. Sir Frederick Pollock in his book on the Indian Contract Act expressed an opinion that sec. 69 of the Act lays down in one respect a wider rule than appears to be supported by any English authority, and that the words "interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay" might include the apprehension of any kind of loss or inconvenience or at any rate of any detriment capable of being assessed in money, while that was not enough in the common law, to found a claim to reimbursement by the person interested, if he makes the payment himself. This view has been judicially adopted by Stanley, C. J., in the case of Tulsa Kunwar v. Jogeswar Prasad (3) and by the Madras High Court in the case of Subramaniam Iyer v. Rungappa Reddi (4) and by this Court in the case of Pankhabati Chaudhurani v. Nani Lall Singh (5).

Now, what are the facts in the present case? The Plaintiff claiming to have a share in the properties sold under the decree of the landlords applied for permission to deposit the decretal dues and compensation for setting aside the sale. There is nothing to indicate that he did not bonâ fide believe at the time that he had such a share. The pleader for the auction-purchaser intimated to the Court that he had no instructions in the matter. The Plaintiff adduced evidence and proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he had the interest he claimed and that he was entitled to have the sale set aside on deposit of the decretal amount and compensation. The Court granted the permission and the Plaintiff thereupon made the deposit and it does not appear that any objection was taken at any subsequent stage to the Plaintiff's assertion of the right that he claimed. Under these circumstances it may fairly be held that the Plaintiff should succeed on the provisions contained in sec. 69 of the Contract Act. This view is in accord with what was said with regard to that section in the case of Sarafatali v. Issan Ali (6).

NAGENDRA NATH ROY v. JUGAL KISHORE ROY.

Assuming however that sec. 69 is not applicable, the question arises as to whether the claim can be supported on the principles contained in sec. 70 of the Contract Act.

This section lays down three circumstances as necessary to found the right of demand, viz., 1st, that the act should be lawfully done for another, 2nd, that it should not be the doer's intention to do it gratuitously, and 3rd, that the other party should enjoy the benefit of it.

Now as regards the first of the above-mentioned three circumstances, the word "lawfully" has been the subject of judicial interpretation in several cases in which some points of diversity are noticeable.

In the case of Damodara Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India (7), the Government had repaired a tank from which were irrigated lands in the zamindari of the Defendants and also raiya-wari villages held under the Government which had been severed from the zamindari and it was not found that there was any request, either express or implied, on the part of the Defendants to the Government to execute the repairs, but it was found that the Defendants knew that the repairs which were necessary for the preservation of the tank were being carried out and did not wish to execute them themselves except as contractors and that they had enjoyed the benefit of the work done. Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Shephard, J., pointed out that the statement of the law as contained in this section is derived from the notes to Lamp-bigh v. Braith Wait (8) and perhaps indirectly from the Roman law, and goes further than what is justified by the English cases. They held in that case that there certainly may be difficulties in applying a rule stated in such wide terms as expressed in sec. 70, that according to the section, it was not essential that the act should have been necessary in the sense that it was done under circumstances of pressing emergency or even that it should have been necessary to be done for the preservation of property, and that the section could therefore be extended to cases in which no question of salvage arises, and further observed thus: "It is not limited to persons standing in particular relations to another, and except in the requirement that the act shall be lawful, no condition is prescribed as to the circumstances under which it shall be done," and also "it is plain that the section ought not to be read so as to justify the officious interference of one man with the affairs or the property of another, or to impose obligations in respect of services which the person sought to be charged did not wish to have rendered. In the present case there can be no doubt that the Government acted lawfully in repairing the tank. The act was lawful whether done with a view of benefiting all the villages under the tank or the Government villages only, whether or not done with the intention of the charging the zemindars. Having regard to the fact that zemindars knew of the intention to execute the repairs and did not disapprove, we think that if the repairs were done for the zemindars, they were done lawfully for them." This decision has been considered in several later decisions of the same Court. But its authority in so far as the aforesaid propositions are concerned has remained unchallenged. In the case of Chedi Lal v. Bhagwan Das (9), which was a case of satisfaction of a mortgage decree by a person not subject to any legal obligation thereunder, Straight, J., observed: "But I presume that the legislature intended something when it used the word 'lawful' and that it had in contemplation cases in which a person held such a relation to another as either to justify an inference that by some act done for another person the party doing the act was entitled to look for compensation for it to the person for whom it was done. Here there was in my opinion no such relation between the parties as would create any such right or from which it could be reasonably inferred. If the Plaintiffs, as mere volunteers, choose to put their hands into their pockets and to pay a sum of money not for the Defendants but for themselves, that was their own look-out and they cannot now claim the benefit of sec. 70." In the same case Mahmud, J., remarked: "I need only add that any other view of the law would amount to saying that the effect of sec. 70 of the Contract Act is to enable a total stranger, without any express or implied request on behalf of a debtor, to put himself into the shoes of the creditor by the simple fact of paying the debts due by such debtor. I do not think that the section could have been intended to involve such results." In the case of Raja Baikuntha Nath Dey Bahddur v. Udai Chand Mañti (10) Mookerjee, J., observed that the word "lawfully" in sec. 70 is not a mere surplusage, and it must be considered in each individual case whether the person who made the payment had any interest in making it; and if not, the payment cannot be said to have been made lawfully. In the case of Panchcouri Ghose v. Haridas Jati (11), Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J., with the concurrence of Mookerjee, J., qualified the above proposition by stating that "any interest" must be a "lawful interest," and held that deposit of money by a person as a mortgagee on the strength of a forged mortgage bond with an ulterior object of subsequently getting hold of the land of the person for whom the payment was made was not a lawful payment within the meaning of sec. 70. In a later case, viz., that of Sarafatuli v. Issan Ali (6), Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ., held that sec. 70 was applicable to the case of a person who is wrongly made a party to a mortgage suit, as one of the representatives of a mortgagor, and a decree being obtained therein, satisfies the decree in full, and in the suit for contribution which he institutes it is found that he had no interest in the property, and observed that the exposition of the law as laid down in the cases of Raja Baikuntha v. Udai Chand (10) and Panchcouri v. Haridas (11) was not in conflict with the view that was now taken. In the case of Gopeswar Banerjee v. Brojo Sudari Devi (12), where a Hindu reversioner made a payment to stop a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act of property then in possession of a Hindu widow to whom he was reversioner, it was held that the payee had no such interest as might make the payment a lawful payment within the meaning of sec. 70. It may perhaps be doubted as to whether in the last-mentioned case too limited a meaning has not been given to the word "lawful." In some of these cases stress has been laid upon the dictum of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ram Tahal Singh v Bireswar Lall Sahu (13), which runs in these words: "It is not in every case in which a man has been benefited by the money of another that an obligation to repay that money arises. The question is not to be determined by nice consideration of what may be fair or proper according to the highest morality. To support such a suit there must be an obligation, express or implied, to repay." This dictum it should be remembered was pronounced in a very special case in which the facts were very peculiar and in connexion with a suit which came into existence before the law was codified in the Indian Contract Act.

In the case of Suchand Ghosal v. Balaram Mardana (14), where a tenant whose interest in a holding had not been affected by certain sales, he not having been a party to the decrees, deposited money to set aside the sales, without protest from any party or the Court, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., observed that as the Plaintiff in making the deposits acted with the approval of the Court, what he did was done lawfully and further observed thus: "The terms of sec. 70 are unquestionably wide, but applied with discretion they enable the Courts to do substantial justice in cases where it would be difficult to impute to the persons concerned relations actually created by contract. It is, however, specially incumbent on final Courts of fact to be guarded and circumspect in their conclusions and not to countenance acts or payments that are really officious." .

In the present suit, of course, we are not satisfied that the Plaintiff has been able to prove that parties are governed by the Mitakshara law. That however does not matter, for his right to make the deposit was expressly gone into and found in his favour by the Court and he made the deposit under the permission of the Court. The payment made was thus a lawful payment according to the dictum of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Suchand Ghosal v. Balaram Mardana (14) quoted above. It is not a case in which the deposit was allowed to be made without an adjudication of the Plaintiff's right as was the case in Panchouri v. Haridas (11) (see the observations of Coxe, J., at the bottom of page 327). The position of the Plaintiff in this case is very much like that of a person who obtains a decree declaring his right to deposit the money and then makes the deposit, and subsequently the decree is found to be unfounded or wrongly passed as was the case in Bindubasini Dasi v. Harendra Lall Roy (1) and is entirely different from that of a person who has merely a claim which is subsequently found to be without foundation.

It was not a payment made by a wrongdoer simply for his own purposes as in the case of Binda Koer v. Bhonda Das (15), nor made fraudulently or for the purpose of manufacturing evidence of title to the land as in the cases of Jinnat Ali v. Fateh Ali (16), Desai Himat Singji v. Bhavabhāi (17) and Bama Sundari v. Adhar Chandra (18), nor a mere voluntary or officious payment as was the case in Yogamlal v. Naina Pillai (19) and Gordhan Lal v. Darbar Shri Surajmalji (20), nor are there any materials on the record upon which it can be said that the payment was made with a sinister object such as was the case in Janki Prosad Singh v. Baldeo Prosad (21).

In my opinion the existence of an interest is generally a test as to the lawful character of a payment, but even if an interest were not shown to exist payments on account of another, if lawfully made, would generally be provided for by sec. 70 of the Act.

As regards the other two requisites of the section it is sufficient to state that there is nothing to indicate that the Plaintiff intended to make the payment gratuitously, but all the circumstances point to his having made the deposit in order to save the property and to his having intended to look to the Defendants for contribution proportionate to their interest. It has been urged that the Plaintiff has not been able to prove that he had any separate funds. There is however some evidence that he has his own funds and what is more important is the undisputed fact that the payment was made by the Plaintiff. It has not been contended and on the authorities it cannot be contended that the word "does" in sec. 70 does not include payment of money. As regards the Appellants having enjoyed the benefits of this payment, there can hardly be any question, for there is the fact that Ashutosh Roy in his capacity as judgment-debtor did, in fact, get back his share in the properties which had been lost to him by the sale. Beyond the fact that at the sale the property was purchased in the name of the Appellant No. 1 there is nothing upon which it may be held that the deposit was made against the wishes of the judgment-debtors or that they ever repudiated it as having been made against their interest.

This, in my opinion, is a case, in which it may very well be said that the payment was a lawful one, that it was not gratuitous or the result of an officious interference of a person who had no reason to think that he had an interest in making it, and that the Appellants have admittedly enjoyed the benefits of the payment, that it was lawfully made at the time he made it, that he did so in good faith in the belief that he had an interest and not only that, he was also able to satisfy the Court under whose permission he was to act that he had such an interest. The case comes well within the principles laid down in a series of cases in which the right to be reimbursed in similar circumstances has been recognised, of which reference may be made to those of Nalini Krishna Bose v. Monmohon Bose (22), Smith v. Dina Nath (23), Upendra Chandra v. Tara Prasanna (24) and Chandra Sekhar Kar v. Nafar Chandra Kundu (25). Some of these cases were decided without reference to sec. 70 of the Contract Act; and in the last-mentioned case it was observed that it is consistent with general principles of equity that those whose funds are used to meet the legitimate demands of others, when the latter have the benefit of such payments, are entitled to ask the latter to pay to the extent of the benefit, that they cannot retain the benefits and plead non-liability, and that where the codified law does not cover the case, the Court should apply the general law, legal and equitable. It is no doubt necessary to be very circumspect in the application of this general principle of justice, equity and good conscience, but the terms of sec. 70 are wide enough to afford ample room for the application of this principle in a fit case. Upon the facts to which I have already referred, the present case seems to me to be one in which it will be just to apply the provisions of that section.

One other argument deserves notice. It has been said that there are suits pending between the Plaintiff's father and uncle, viz., the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the one hand and the Appellants on the other, as to the liabilities of the former in respect of joint family funds in their hands and as the money which the Plaintiff advanced was not his own money, Plaintiff should not be allowed a decree, but that all the liabilities should be adjusted in the said suits. I do not however see any reason why the Plaintiff should not be given a decree in the present case on the strength of the findings of which I have arrived. This decree will not stand in the way of the Appellants showing, if they may, in these suits that the money which the Plaintiff advanced as being his own, really belonged to the joint family, and getting credits therefor in the usual way if they succeed in showing the same.

The result is that while I do not agree in the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge I hold that the decree passed by him is substantially correct. The appeal therefore fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs (one set). The hearing fee is assessed at five gold mohurs.

GREAVES, J.—I agree.

Welcome to the Bench and the Bar.

We accord our hearty welcome to the Bench, the Bar, the judiciary and the members of the legal profession all over India, on the resumption of our duties at the beginning of the legal year and offer them our humble services and help in the administration of justice which is the noblest of all functions of the State, on which its whole superstructure rests and which after all is the corner-stone of citizen's rights and of personal and popular liberty.

The late Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu.

Since the Courts closed during the Dusserah Vacation when we took our annual holiday, one of our foremost public men who was also one of the leading solicitors of Calcutta has passed away. Mr. Bhupendra Nath Basu who after a long and meritorious career both in the profession and public life broke down some months ago, breathed his last on Tuesday the 16th of September. Death has indeed levied a heavy toll this year on the great men of Bengal and following so closely upon the death of Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri and Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee, the death of Mr. Basu is not only a great blow to Bengal but to the whole of India. A man of strong personality, of liberal views and broad sympathies, Mr. Basu was for many years one of the leaders of public opinion in this country. Not to speak of his own province, all India to-day feels poorer at his loss and the guiding hand of the veteran statesman will be missed everywhere. While appreciating the benefit that India has derived from the British rule, he never hesitated to urge upon the Government the just claims of his countrymen and in spite of failures and disappointments he never despaired of ultimate success in a legitimate campaign of the Indian people for the full rights of British citizenship and the privilege of managing their own affairs. He was a solicitor with a large practice but he never grudged to devote a good portion of his time to matters of public interest. Mr. Basu was an ardent worker of the Indian National Congress of which august assembly he was the president at its sitting in Madras in 1914. He took a very prominent part in the public agitation against the partition of Bengal and as a non-official member of the Provincial and Indian Legislatures he did much useful work. He took no less interest in social and educational reforms than in political. In 1919 he was appointed a member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India and in that capacity he did much to give the new Government of India Act the shape it has. In 1922 he was nominated by the Government of India as their representative at the Labour Conference at Geneva. In 1923 Mr. Basu came back to India and was appointed a member of the Public Services Commission. After making over charge of his office at Whitehall, Mr. Basu became a member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Bengal and though in failing health he accepted the office of Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta in succession to Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee. By the death of Mr. Basu the legal profession has lost one of its ablest members and Bengal a no less able, sober, level-headed and patriotic leader. If he had been alive to-day, wiser council would have prevailed in the Executive Council of the Government of Bengal and the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance would not have come into existence. We convey our heart-felt condolence to the members of the bereaved family.

Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance, (I) of 1924.

We very much regret that it should at all have been considered necessary or expedient to have resort to legislation by Ordinance by the Governor-General of India at the instance of the Governor of Bengal arming the Police and the executive with extraordinary powers and ousting the jurisdiction of law Courts with regard to certain offences. In exercise of the powers conferred by sec. 72 of the Government of India Act, the Governor-General has promulgated an Ordinance called the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Ordinance, 1924. Its main features are :—In cases of certain specified offences it substitutes a trial by three Commissioners for the ordinary trial by jury. No preliminary enquiry is necessary and the Commissioners are authorised to take cognizance of offences without the accused being committed to them for trial. In matters of adjournment and bail, the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure are superseded by those of the Ordinance. An appeal to the High Court is, however, allowed in the ordinary way against a conviction and sentence passed by the Commissioners and capital sentences passed by the Commissioners are subject to confirmation by the High Court. The more drastic provisions of the Ordinance are those that are contained in secs. 12 and 14. Sec. 12 lays down that under orders of the Local Government any person may be arrested without warrant and committed to custody in jail, and sec. 14 empowers any officer of Government authorised in this behalf by general or special order of the Local Government to arrest without warrant any person against whom a reasonable suspicion exists that he is a person in respect of whom an order might lawfully be made under sec. 12. To persons committed to custody in jail an allowance is to be given by Government but they are to be treated as under-trial prisoners subject to jail discipline. By a notification issued simultaneously with the Ordinance the Local Government has invested all Magistrates of the first class and all police officers above the rank of Sub-Inspector with the powers under sec.

14. In two lengthy statements issued along with the Ordinance the Governor and Governor-General have given reasons for promulgating the Ordinance:

We have very carefully considered the reasons advanced by the Governor of Bengal in Council for taking the powers conferred by the Ordinance by the Governor-General and we find them quite unconvincing. The reasons given by His Excellency the Governor-General are but a resumé of those given by the Government of Bengal and so what we have to say about the latter will be equally applicable to the former. We are of opinion that the Government have not been able to make out any case for the passing of such a drastic Ordinance. The Government of Bengal say that "the Government of Bengal have not been able to take the public as fully into their confidence as they would wish." We have no sympathy for anarchy or anarchical movements but we have no sympathy either for the Executive Government taking and conferring on the Police more drastic and arbitrary powers than the "Dora" by an Ordinance in times of peace and ousting the jurisdiction of the Courts of law in a more thorough-going manner. The "Dora" or the Defence of India Act and the Rules thereunder were passed at a time when the greatest of wars, known to history, was threatening the safety of India no less than that of the British Isles, when enemy's war vessels were cruising in Indian waters, bombarding her coasts, and foreign emissaries were trying to promote internal disorder and rising in India. It is ridiculous to say that the Bengal Government require similar or much more drastic powers now to put down a few stray and straggling individuals who may entertain revolutionary or anarchical ideas and commit some reckless crimes.

We fully believe that it is quite competent for the Police with a very ordinary amount of vigilance to keep these desperate persons in check as is done throughout the civilized world and to bring them to book in the law Courts under the ordinary law of the country. The Ordinance and the reasons advanced for bringing it into existence seem to us to cast an unmerited slur on the judiciary, the jury and the people of Bengal and an indirect censure on the Government itself and the Police. We shall take the principal cases relied on by Government in justification of taking such extraordinary powers under the Ordinance. These are the cases of Barendra Ghose (Sankaritol murder) and Gopi Mohan Shaha (Day murder case). They are fresh in our memory. So far as the public are concerned, it will be remembered that the members of the public including a student returning from College gave Barendra a chase at the risk of their lives when he ran firing at them. Then at his trial witnesses gave their evidence boldly and none of them were intimidated or molested at the time or since then. The jury also returned a unanimous verdict of guilty and the Court passed the extreme sentence under law which has recently been confirmed by the Privy Council. It is the Government of India who commuted the death sentence on Barendra to one of transportation, not on the recommendation of the Judges and the jury who tried the case, but at the instance of the Bengal Government. Then again take Gopi Mohan Shaha's case. He too was arrested after the atrocious crime by the common people in the street and at the risk of their lives when he too was running and firing. At his trial the plea of insanity was pressed on the jury very vigorously by his Counsel and expert medical witness. It cannot be questioned from the evidence that the fellow was a maniac. But the jury had no sympathy for this homicidal maniac and returned a verdict of guilty. The jury are not supposed to be judges of the law but relying on their sound common sense they brought in the right verdict which is in accordance with Macnaghten's case which laid down that insanity as a plea can only prevail if the accused is found to be devoid of the sense of right and wrong and is unable to judge of the consequences of his act. The law as laid down by the Indian Penal Code is the same.

The Government of Bengal says that if it possessed powers now conferred by the Ordinance they could have prevented the murder. But the evidence in this case showed that the accused was seen several times in the neighbourhood of Park Street and the maidan at early hours of the morning, when Bengali youths are seldom to be seen in that quarter. He must have had his revolver with him then and if arrested on suspicion, for which the Code of Criminal Procedure makes ample provision, this diabolical murder could have been prevented and the accused punished. Two lives might have been thus saved. This case is a serious reflection on the detective ability of the police, and now they by way of an excuse ask for arbitrary powers which will only further demoralise them. About the recent Alipur Gang case, everyone who has followed the proceedings knows how the Police bungled it and even the judge who tried it recorded a note reflecting on their conduct. The veiled suggestion that the judges and the jury failed in their duty is a most unjustifiable charge. As regards the Sirajgunge resolution, it is well-known that the public and all sections of the press unanimously condemned it. Only one newspaper was at great pains to explain that the resolution could not be regarded as lending any support to any creed of murder or violence and that because its editor was indiscreet enough to lend it his indirect support in a different capacity. The Government says it has been able to trace the red leaflets to its publisher. Why then does it not prosecute him? As regards Dhenki's case and the subsequent murder of his co-accused it is still sub-judice and we express no opinion and the Government should not either. Thus the plea of the Government that extraordinary powers are required because the judges, the jury and witnesses or the members of the public cannot be relied on to bring anarchists or revolutionary criminals to justice utterly fails.

The Government say that they do not consider it expedient to take the public into their confidence regarding the prevalence of revolutionary or anarchical movements in Bengal and assert that "they have had informations which have been tested and found reliable." The members of the public who, we have shown, are not in sympathy with such movements, are not prepared to accept such ipse dixit of the Government. Even in the pre-reform days the Government used to place sufficient evidence of such movements before the public and that by prosecution of persons concerned in such conspiracies or crimes before the Courts of justice. This is the only means by which the Government or the public can be satisfied about the truth or otherwise of the facts concerning them. The Government and the Police mostly get their information from spies and informers who as a rule are not a very reliable class of people. It is therefore all the more necessary that their informations should be tested and corroborated by other witnesses in open Court. There is no question that revolutionary conspiracies came into existence in Bengal after the Partition. The Government of the day had to face a very grave situation. Still they did not adopt the dark methods of the present Government. They, no doubt, got the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908 passed but Part I of it was not at all such a drastic measure as the present Ordinance. Persons or groups of persons suspected of seditious conspiracy or political crimes were all the same tried before the law Courts. The Act of 1908 provided for a preliminary inquiry before a Magistrate, though of a summary nature, which the Ordinance has altogether dispensed with. Then when a prima facie case was made out, the accused were committed to the High Court for trial by a special bench of three Judges, though without a jury, and for this the Ordinance now substitutes a Commission of Mofussil Judges and no jury. The Government may also take the opinion of two judicial officers with regard to persons arrested but their opinion is not final and the Executive Government will have the last say in the matter. The Commission will discharge their duties in a more or less Court martial fashion. Is it at all proper to adopt such a course by any constitutional Government in times of peace?

Even between 1908 and 1912 when there was more unrest in Bengal than there has ever been in this province, the Government of the day, though professedly autocratic, adopted a more constitutional course. They submitted the cases of conspiracy of a far more serious character than is alleged to exist now to judicial tribunals. We need here mention only the leading ones. The Alipur Conspiracy case (1908), the Dacca Conspiracy case (1910), the Howrah Gang case (1910), the Barisal Conspiracy case, (trial in 1913 of a conspiracy of a much earlier date), the Raja Bazar Bomb case (trial in 1913 of a conspiracy of an earlier date). All these ended in conviction as will be found from the law reports or the appendix to Rowlatt Committee's Report. These and many other cases, which were successfully prosecuted by the Government of the day, and the heavy sentences of transportation and imprisonment that were passed by the law Courts then, broke the back of these conspiracies. It is a fiction on the part of the Government to say that it was the orders of internment and deportation that were passed then or during the war that enabled them to cope with the terrorist movement in Bengal. Soon after the annulment of the Partition the great war broke out and such an event was bound to promote violent activities of some stray and straggling revolutionaries who remained undetected. They continued committing some crimes for their own personal gain or for taking revenge but not in any organised form. The only incident of importance was the taking away of a large consignment of arms and ammunition on its way to Rodda & Co. But the Government of Bengal did not hesitate to submit even this Arms Theft case for trial before the law Court and it ended in a conviction of the persons concerned. We need not go into the details of war-time troubles, which were to no small extent promoted by foreign emissaries. The Indian people helped the Government in every way possible. The Defence of India Act and its rules were framed for coping with troubles created by foreign emissaries and not at all as an executive weapon for the punishment of political offenders without a trial.

It was, however, the Rowlatt Act that was so designed. But before the Rowlatt Act was framed, a committee was appointed before whom not only all the cases of political outrages and conspiracies from 1907 to 1913 but also facts of a more serious character such as, attempts for the supply of ship-loads of rifles, pistols, bombs and cartridges by the enemy were placed and the Rowlatt Report after reviewing and publishing all these facts for public information proposed special legislation. If the publication of the Rowlatt Report did not set the Hoogly on fire, we do not believe the facts alleged to be in the possession of Lord Lytton and his wise councillors will do so. Unless the public are taken into confidence, they would be quite justified in believing that the Governor is being led blindfold by some of his autocratic executive councillors and the police, now that the Legislative Council has adopted a policy of self-immolation. The Government has, however, made a very sinister use of Mr. C. R. Das's reckless assertion regarding the prevalence of anarchy in Bengal to his complete discomfiture when he vainly imagined that he could thus bluff the British Government to come to terms with him on the lines of the Irish Treaty of 1919. The Government here took advantage of his hoax to throw dust into the eyes of the Labour Government and the latter in their turn made as much use of it for electioneering purposes as their opponents did of the Zinovieff's letter. But after all, political trickery does not pay in the long run. We would therefore suggest to the Government of Bengal and the Government of India to withdraw the Ordinance and put the persons arrested thereunder to their trial before the ordinary Courts of law under the ordinary law of the land which would enable them to cope more effectively with the criminal activities of political offenders. Coercive and repressive laws only serve to promote general discontent in the country.

We shall conclude by pointing out that the terms of the Ordinance are even more drastic than the Rowlatt Act—a very ill-fated legislation which after it was passed by the Indian Legislature, in 1919, by a nominated official majority, brought in a lot of troubles which is still fresh in our memory. It remained a dead letter ever since, till its funeral rites were mournfully performed by Sir William Vincent in the Legislative Assembly in 1922 with the full concurrence of Lord Reading who accepted the recommendations of the Repressive Laws Committee of the Indian Legislatures in this behalf. The present Ordinance is but a hideous ghost that has been conjured up out of the grave of the Rowlatt Act by the joint collaboration of Lord Reading and Lord Lytton and some of their uncanny councillors. That this is so will appear from the skeleton sketch of both the Ordinance and the Rowlatt Act, we publish below.

REPRESSIVE LAWS, PAST AND PRESENT.

A brief survey of the Legislation undertaken in recent years to supersede the ordinary criminal law of the land shows that in 1908 the Indian Criminal Law Amendment Act (Act XIV) was passed whereby a special procedure was provided for the trial of certain offences by three Judges of the High Court. The proceedings were to be instituted by an ex parte preliminary enquiry by a Magistrate. Part II of this Act dealt with unlawful associations and the Governor-General could declare any association unlawful and the penalty for being a member of an unlawful association was imprisonment for three years.

In 1915 the Defence of India (Criminal Law Amendment) Act (Act V) was passed for the more speedy trial of certain offences. The preliminary enquiry for the purpose of commitment was dispensed with and the trial was to be by three Commissioners as under the new Ordinance which in matters of trial is almost on a line with this Act, with this exception that the Ordinance provides for an appeal to the High Court in the ordinary way and a sentence of death passed by the Commissioners under the Ordinance is subject to confirmation by the High Court. Under sec. 2 of this Act the Governor-General in Council could make rules for the purpose of securing the public safety and the defence of British India. Sec. 3 of these rules [Defence of India (consolidation) rules] laid down that where in the opinion of the Local Government there were reasonable grounds for believing that any person had acted, was acting or was about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or the defence of British India, the Local Government might by order in writing direct that such person was not to enter, reside or remain in any area specified in the order; was to reside or remain in any area specified in the order; was to reside or remain in any area in British India so specified; was to conduct himself in such manner or abstain from such acts or take such order with any property in his possession or under his control as might be specified in the order.

In 1919 the Anarchical and Revolutionary Crimes Act (Act XI) was passed which made special provisions for the trial of certain offences by three Judges of the High Court, the proceedings being instituted by the lodging of an information with the Chief Justice. Part II of this Act laid down in sec. 22 that when in the opinion of the Local Government there were reasonable grounds for believing that any person was or had been actively concerned in any anarchical or revolutionary movement the Local Government might make an order against such person directing him to execute a bond, to notify his residence or to remain or reside in any area in British India specified in the order. Part III of this Act laid down in sec. 34 that where in the opinion of the Local Government there were reasonable grounds for believing that any person had been or was concerned in any offence mentioned in the schedule of the Act the Local Government might make an order directing the arrest of such person without warrant and the confinement of any person in such place and under such conditions and restrictions as might be specified in the order. Under this section the Local Government might direct the search of any place specified in the order which in the opinion of the Local Government had been, was being, or was about to be, used for any purpose connected with any anarchical or revolutionary movement.

In each case, both under Part II and Part III, before making the order the Local Government was to place all the materials in its possession relating to the particular case in question before a judicial officer qualified for appointment to a High Court and take his opinion and it was only after considering such opinion that the Local Government could make an order under Part II or Part III.

Sec. 12 of the Ordinance lays down :—

“(1) Where in the opinion of the Local Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person—

(i) has acted, is acting or is about to act in contravention of the provisions of the Indian Arms Act, 1878, or of the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, or

(ii) has committed, is committing, or is about to commit any offence specified in the second schedule, or

(iii) has acted, is acting, or is about to act with a view to interfere by violence or by threat of violence with the administration of justice,

The Local Government, if it is satisfied that such person is a member or is being controlled or instigated by a member of any association of which the objects or methods include the doing of any of such acts or the commission of any of such offences, may, by order in writing, give all or any of the following directions, namely, that such person

(a) shall notify his residence and any change of residence to such authority as may be specified in the order :

(b) shall report himself to the police in such manner and at such periods as may be so specified :

(c) shall conduct himself in such manner or abstain from such acts as may be so specified :

(d) shall reside or remain in any area in British India so specified :

(e) shall not enter, reside in or remain in any area specified in such order :

(f) shall be committed to custody in any jail :

Provided that the Local Government shall not in an order under cl. (a) or cl. (b) specify an area or a jail outside Bengal without the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council.

(2) The Local Government in its order under sub-sec. (1) may direct

(a) the arrest without warrant of the person in respect of whom the order is made at any place where he may be found by any police officer or other officer of Government to whom the order may be directed or endorsed by or under the general or special authority of the Local Government ;

(b) the search of any place specified in the order which in the opinion of the Local Government has been, is being or is about to be used by such person for the purpose of doing any act or committing any offence of the nature described in sub-sec. (1).”

Sec. 14 of the Ordinance provides :—

“(1) Any officer of Government authorised in this behalf by general or special order of the Local Government may arrest without warrant any person against whom a reasonable suspicion exists that he is a person in respect of whom an order might lawfully be made under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 12.

(2) Any officer exercising the power conferred by sub-sec. (1) may at the time of making the arrest search any place and seize any property which is or is reasonably suspected of being used by such person for the purpose of doing any act or committing any offence of the nature described in sub-sec. (1) of sec. 12.

(3) Any officer making an arrest under sub-sec. (1) shall forthwith report the fact to the Local Government and pending receipt of the orders of the Local Government may by order in writing commit any person so arrested to such custody as the Local Government may by general or special order specify in that behalf :

Provided that no person shall be detained in custody under this section for a period exceeding fifteen days save under a special order of the Local Government and no person shall in any case be detained in custody under this section for a period exceeding one month."

By a notification the Local Government has authorised all Magistrates of the first class and all police officers above the rank of Sub-Inspector to make arrests under sec. 14. The notification also authorises that persons arrested under sec. 14 in any area subject to the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, shall be committed to custody in the Presidency Jail and those arrested in any other area shall be committed to custody in the District Jail. The notification further provides that persons committed to custody under sec. 14 shall for the duration of such custody be subject to jail discipline in all respects as if they were under-trial prisoners committed to custody under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

It will thus be seen that the Ordinance provides for no preliminary safeguard like taking the opinion of a judicial officer before making an order which was to be found in the Rowlatt Act but only provides in sec. 19 that within one month from the date of the issue of an order under sec. 12 the Local Government shall place before two Judges the facts and circumstances of each case and on receipt of the report of the Judges the Local Government shall pass such orders as will appear to be just and proper. Over and above this the special provision has been made under sec. 14 for arrest by a police officer.

MODE OF RECORDING EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Having regard to the general object of Chap. XXV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which is to ensure the accuracy of the record and afford information to the accused as to what the evidence at the trial is, compliance with sec. 360, cl. (1) which lays down that the evidence of each witness after being recorded by the Court shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused, if in attendance, or of his pleader, if he appears by pleader and shall, if necessary, be corrected is imperative.

It is a matter of common knowledge that this wholesome provision of law enacted not only for the benefit of the witness but also of the accused is almost universally ignored. The result has been to set up a wholly erroneous practice in the Criminal Courts in direct contravention of the law on the subject. A similar deplorable consequence was brought about by the non-observance of sec. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which came to the notice of the High Court in Muzahar Ali v. King-Emperor, 27 C. W. N. 99 and subsequent cases and it was ruled that strict compliance with the provisions of the statute was absolutely necessary and must be enforced. In consequence of this decision a very large number of cases, disposed of both in the Mofussil and in Calcutta had to be retried. Exactly similar will be the result of the recent decision of the High Court in Hira Lal Ghosh v. The King-Emperor, 28 C. W. N. 968, in which their Lordships Newbould and Mukerji, JJ., have strongly condemned the practice of not complying with the provisions of sec. 360, cl. (1) and held that the failure to comply with the provisions deprives the accused of the very valuable right of checking the depositions of the witnesses and vitiates the whole trial.

In the first Draft Bill (III of 1914) for the purpose of amending the Code of Criminal Procedure, it was proposed, in cl. 83 of the Bill, evidently to legalise the practice that had grown up, to amend sec. 360, so as to provide for the reading over of the deposition to the witness only if the accused so desired and not in any other case. The Calcutta High Court when consulted on the Bill supported the proposed amendment but in the Bill introduced in the Imperial Legislative Assembly on 20th September 1917, cl. 83 was omitted. Thus it is clear that the Legislature deliberately decided that the inconvenience, if any, caused by the provisions of sec. 360 did not justify an alteration of the law and therefore it is all the more necessary and imperative that compliance with the provisions of the section must be strictly enforced. Hundreds of cases will now have to be retried on the ground that the depositions of the witnesses were not properly read over to them as last year numerous retrials took place on account of the omission of the Magistrates to examine the accused under sec. 342 after the close of the evidence for the prosecution. This waste of public time is much to be regretted and the responsibility for it rests with the Magistrates who must now clearly understand that the slightest deviation from imperative rules of procedure laid down by the Legislature cannot be validated by any practice that may have grown up without the sanction of law, however long established and frequently followed that practice may be.

In a correspondence to be published hereafter our attention is drawn to another point in connection with sec. 360. The ordinary mode of taking evidence in a criminal case is that the Judge or Magistrate should record it in the language of the Court (sec. 356) or in his mother tongue (sec. 357) in the form of a narrative (sec. 359) and the record so made is to be read over to the witness in the presence of the accused (sec. 360). Sec. 355 is an exception to the general rule and empowers the Court to make a memorandum only of the substance of the evidence of each witness in summons cases and in cases of certain offences mentioned in sec. 260; on the other hand, under sec. 358 the Magistrate in his discretion may in cases in which he is authorised to make only a memorandum of the evidence choose to make a full record. Sec. 360 enjoins that the evidence of each witness taken down under sec. 356 or sec. 357 shall be read over in the manner provided; in other words, the evidence recorded is to be read over to the witness only in those cases where a full record is made and not where a memorandum only of the substance is kept for in these latter cases, having regard to the petty nature thereof, the Legislature has allowed a deviation from the general rule.

The question raised is whether sec. 360 applies to a case where the Magistrate chooses to proceed under sec. 358. Sec. 358 is analogous to sub-sec. (2) of sec. 260 which provides for the regular trial of a case which the Magistrate has commenced under the summary form but which in the course of the trial appears to be of a character which renders a regular trial necessary. Where a Magistrate takes action under sub-sec. (2) of sec. 260 all the formalities of a regular trial must be followed and advantage cannot be taken of the deviations from the general rule provided for summary trials by secs. 263, 264. Likewise if the Magistrate chooses to follow sec. 358 all the formalities of recording evidence in a regular way must be followed and sec. 360 will undoubtedly apply and the evidence of witnesses recorded by the Magistrate must be read over to them in the manner provided by law.

Secs. 356, 359, 360 are obviously to be read together and no one of them can be brought into operation except in conjunction with the others. The arrangement of the sections and the general policy adopted in the Code makes it abundantly clear that this was the intention of the legislature.

As to the point which may be raised about the legality of the Magistrate making a memorandum of the evidence of witnesses in a case, say, under sec. 457, I. P. C., which is a "serious" offence for which the maximum punishment provided is imprisonment for five years, the answer is not far to seek.

Cases under sec. 457, I. P. C., as under many other sections may vary in grades of criminality and a Magistrate can dispose of those cases only which are not fit to be committed to the Court of Sessions, in other words, of petty cases only and in these petty cases the law allows him to take a short cut in proceeding with the trial without recording the depositions in full. The decision of this point does not in any way depend on the applicability or otherwise of sec. 360 to cases proceeded with under sec. 358, because it is entirely optional with the Magistrate to follow the procedure laid down by the latter section or not. If he chooses to follow sec. 358 then and then only sec. 360 comes in; the Magistrate is not in any way bound by the operation of sec. 360 to follow sec. 358.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The Ordinance and its supersession or confirmation by legislation.

We have in our last issue commented on the provisions of the Ordinance lately issued by the Governor-General. From newspaper reports it appears that Pundit Moti Lal Nehru has given notice of the introduction of a Bill in the Legislative Assembly for the repeal of the Ordinance with effect from the date on which it was passed. Ordinances are passed by the Governor-General under sec. 72 of the Government of India Act in cases of emergency for the peace and good government of British India or any part thereof and they are subject to the like disallowance as an Act passed by the Indian Legislature and may be controlled or superseded by any such Act. But under sec. 67 (2) of the Government of India Act, it shall not be lawful without the previous sanction of the Governor-General to introduce at any meeting of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature any measure repealing or amending any Act or Ordinance made by the Governor-General and under r. 19 of the Legislative Rules such sanction is to be appended with the notice of motion for leave to introduce the Bill. Thus the previous sanction of the Governor-General is a condition precedent to the introduction of any measure like the one proposed.

An Ordinance "may be made" by the Governor-General under sec. 72 "in cases of emergency" as was done by His Excellency at the time of the Mophla rising and that was at a time when the Legislature was not sitting. When the Legislature met no one objected to it because there was no question that the rising had created an "emergency" which could not be coped with except by the declaration of martial law by the Ordinances issued at the time. The situation was debated upon when the Legislature met but no exception was taken to the Ordinances. But the circumstances of the issue of the present Ordinance is quite different as no overt act or apprehension of a rising or civil commotion is alleged and the public has been kept in the dark as to the character of the "emergency," if any.

Ordinances are, however, issued by the Governor-General and not by the Governor-General in Council and any resolution or motion for adjournment for eliciting facts or questioning their propriety or recommending their repeal may be ruled out of order under Legislative Rule 23 and Standing Or. 29 of the Indian Legislature. But a convention of the Legislature established by practice may override the Rules and Standing Orders and there is a ruling to that effect by the President of the Assembly with regard to nominal cuts in respect of non-votable items. Since the Mophla disturbances were debated upon, we see no reason why the Bengal situation can not form the subject-matter of a resolution. But apart from such debatable question whether a resolution or motion for adjournment relating to the Ordinance would be in order or not, there can be no question that a motion for leave to introduce a Bill for its repeal before its natural life of six months is quite competent. The Governor-General may no doubt refuse his sanction under sec. 67, but it may be questioned whether he should do so constitutionally. When "leave to appeal" is required by law, it is not intended that such leave should be arbitrarily refused but that leave has to be sought and should be granted when there are prima facie grounds for consideration.

We have mentioned above that the issue of an Ordinance is an "emergency" power and may properly be exercised when any "emergency" arises and the Legislature is not sitting. It seems to us that the spirit of the constitution requires that when the Legislature meets, the Government should of its own motion introduce a Bill covering the grounds of the Ordinance for obtaining legislative sanction to it. If such sanction is refused and the Governor-General is still convinced that it is essential for the safety or tranquillity or interests of British India or of any part thereof he may certify the measure under sec. 67B. Such a course would be far more constitutional than to ignore the Legislature altogether and to refuse leave to the introduction of any Bill; for, that would imply the Governor-General's want of confidence in the Legislature. As the constitutional head of the Government of India he should give the Legislature every opportunity for discussion of Ordinances promulgated by him in his executive capacity. Further, the provision in sec. 72 that an Ordinance may be "disallowed, controlled or superseded" by an Act of the Legislature would be quite unmeaning, if sec. 67 of the Act is to be read as meaning that leave for introduction of any Bill for the repeal of an Ordinance should invariably be refused.

We are further of opinion that such leave should be given because it is a very properly debatable question whether any such "emergency" has arisen in Bengal as would justify the issue of the Ordinance in question. Such a debate in the Legislature which would be an index to the public opinion in the country cannot do any harm but on the contrary would do much good. The Government will also get an opportunity of disclosing facts not known to the public and justify their action. On the other hand, if the Legislature can make out a good case for its repeal and carry the repealing Bill, the Government by accepting the measure may refute the charge of the obstructionists that the Legislature is a sham. If the Legislature fails to make out a good case, the Governor-General may withhold his assent to the repeal. The Government has a further alternative and may, as we have already said, introduce a recommended Bill and certify it under sec. 67B. So to refuse permission to the Legislature to consider and discuss the measure would be, in our opinion, a serious blunder.

Local Legislature and the Ordinance.

Leave for the introduction of a Bill in the Indian Legislature may be refused by the Governor-General on the ground that he has already given sanction to the Governor of the Province concerned to introduce a Bill in the Bengal Legislative Council for passing the Ordinance into law. Such sanction implies that it will be competent for the Local Legislature to amend or reject it altogether. Under Devolution Rules, Sch. I, Part I, item 30, "criminal law including procedure" is put down as a central subject and is outside the scope of the Provincial Legislature. But under sec. 80A (3) (e), with the sanction of the Governor-General such legislation may be undertaken by the local legislature. When such sanction is given and the Ordinance is introduced into the Bengal Council in the form of a Bill of the local legislature, it would be competent for the Bengal Council to pass it, alter it or reject it or even to repeal the Ordinance. For, sec. 80A, sub-sec. (2) says:—

The local legislature of any province may, subject to the provision of the sub-section next following, [i.e., sub-sec. (3)] referred to above which provides for the previous sanction of the Governor-General to legislate with regard to criminal law or procedure.—[Ed.] repeal, or alter as to that province any law made either before or after the commencement of the Act [Government of India Act] by any authority in British India other than that local legislature.

From the above clause it is clear that the Bengal Council will be quite competent to amend or repeal the Ordinance, if a Bill on its lines is introduced in the Council with the sanction of the Governor-General. If the Governor-General has once accorded such sanction to the Bengal Government, he may legitimately refuse leave to the introduction of Pundit Moti Lal's Bill in the Legislative Assembly and in that case such refusal cannot be regarded as unconstitutional. In the statement issued by the Governor-General with the Ordinance, His Excellency announced that with his sanction a Bill for enactment of the Ordinance as a provincial measure of legislation would be introduced. But with regard to the Bill or its time of introduction we are in the dark. It has been surmised that even if such a Bill is introduced and is rejected by the Bengal Council, the Governor may certify it. But we say, sufficient unto the day are the evils thereof. So far we have explained the constitutional position of the situation both with regard to the Indian Legislature and the Local Legislature.

As regards the Governor's power to certify we invite attention to sec. 72E of the Government of India Act which provides that if the "Legislative Council has refused leave to introduce, or has failed to pass in a form recommended by the Governor, any Bill relating to a reserved subject, the Governor may certify that the passage of the Bill is essential for the discharge of his responsibility for the subject, and thereupon, the Bill shall be deemed to be passed." Sub-sec. (2) provides for the assent of His Majesty in Council, but a proviso to it empowers the Governor-General, if he be of opinion that there is an "emergency," to assent to it and thereupon it comes into force subject to disallowance by His Majesty in Council. Sub-sec. (3) provides for laying the Act before the Houses of Parliament for eight days before being presented for His Majesty's assent. It is fruitless now to surmise whether the proposed Bill if rejected by the Provincial Legislative Council will be certified by the Governor and if certified which of the courses mentioned above will be taken by the Governor-General.

In case of rejection by the Council and certification by the Governor, the only constitutional course open to the members would be to resign their seats and appeal to the country, as was proposed to be done by the members of the Legislative Assembly and actually done by some of them, when the Finance Bill doubling the salt tax was certified by the Governor-General. If the members who are opposed to the Bill are returned to the Provincial Council unopposed or by a majority, that would signify the verdict of the country with regard to the measure and such verdict would be binding on any Government which has a regard for the constitution. Once when the Government was heavily defeated, the non-official members of the Legislative Assembly good-humouredly shouted "resign," but the President, Sir Frederick Whyte, humourously observed, "the Government in this country never resigns." It is, therefore, a constitutional anomaly that when the Government suffers a defeat on any vital issue concerning the rights and liberties of the people and disregards the vote or overrides it under its extraordinary powers of certification, the only alternative left to the opposition is to resign and bring about a dissolution and force a general election for confirming the confidence of the electorate in them and want of confidence in the Government with regard to the issue over which the opposition resigned.

Distinction between Civil and Criminal Cases.

It is not uncommon that an application in revision is thrown out on the ground that the sentence passed on the accused has expired. This is not what it ought to be. A conviction in a Criminal Court carries with it a stigma, and an accused person has every right to place his case before the highest Court and solicit its judgment. Moving the High Court means time and money, a fact which should never be overlooked. A notable instance in point is to be found in Emperor v. Umed Singh, I. L. R. 46 All. 64, where Mr. Justice Walsh revised a conviction for defamation after the accused had undergone the full term of imprisonment inflicted on him. The revisional powers conferred on the High Court by the Code of Criminal Procedure are not in any way less comprehensive than those which can be exercised in appeal and it is a mistake to suppose that sec. 439 of the Code is anything like sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Criminal cases stand on a quite different footing from civil actions and it is the duty of the High Court to interfere where the finding arrived at by the lower Court is perverse or contrary to well-established principles of law, otherwise, as observed by the learned Judge, revision would be an idle farce if the revisional Court had not the power to look into the evidence for itself and see if the findings can be justified by what appears on the record. The distinction between a civil and a criminal case has very clearly been pointed out in the case in question where the accused was convicted of defamation for having slandered the complainant by a statement to the effect that the complainant had suffered the penalty of being outcasted by reason of his social relations with a man who was an outcaste. The lower Courts found against the accused especially on the ground that he did not plead justification and therefore although the statement about the complainant having been outcasted might be true he had nonetheless got to go to jail. Says the learned Judge: "I dissent totally from the proposition that in a criminal case an accused person is to be judged by how he pleads or fails to plead in the proceeding. Much injustice may be done by applying to criminal proceedings the precise and pedantic requirements of civil procedure. It is quite true that in dealing with defamation the Penal Code has introduced a series of provisions adopted partly from the old common law in the nature of defences, but it has not altered the fundamental principle of the criminal law that the complainant or prosecution must prove the accused to be guilty, or, in other words, the absence of such facts as happen to bring the case within either of the defences or exceptions laid down in the section. There is no such language as pleadings in a Criminal Court. The subsequent conduct or statement of an accused person may affect his credibility. It cannot destroy his right to be assumed an innocent person until his guilt has been established without any reasonable doubt."

of the benefit of the first exception in sec. 499, I. P. C., on the technical difficulty of a supposed defect in pleading. The observations of the learned Judge are well worth quoting.

"If a person really was outcasted, statement to the members of the brotherhood that he was outcasted was the kind of statement contemplated by the expression 'for the public good.' So long as caste prevails, and it must be remembered that it is sanctified by religious and by social traditions going back for centuries and forming one of the fundamental characteristics of social life in India, any attempt to minimise, ignore or brush aside existing regulations, existing sanctions or respect for existing decisions must be regarded from the Indian point of view as contrary to the public good. It is not from the Indian point of view for the public good that caste ought to be abolished. Therefore to justify the conviction it was necessary to hold not merely that the statement was untrue but if it was true, that it was a statement not honestly made for the benefit of the brotherhood."

As regards the proof of the absence of the existence of facts bringing a case within an exception provided in the Code, sec. 105 of the Evidence Act presents some difficulty. That section says that when a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions of the Indian Penal Code or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code or in any law defining the offence is upon him and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. This, however, does not mean that the accused must lead evidence. If it is apparent from the evidence on the record whether produced by the prosecution or by the defence that a general exception would apply the presumption of sec. 105 of the Evidence Act is removed. In the case under notice the question was whether the statement made by the accused was false and further if it was true whether or not it was for the public good. Whether it was for the public good or not was a question of fact which could be decided on the statement itself without any additional evidence. Thus there was no reason for depriving the accused

RIGHT OF APPEAL UNDER THE PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT.

Sec. 75 of Act V of 1920 corresponding to sec. 46 of Act III of 1907 is the provision that deals with appeals in insolvency matters. Cl. 2 of the section specifies by reference to Sch. I of the Act the various orders against which a person aggrieved by a decision of the District Court sitting as an original Court of insolvency jurisdiction could prefer an appeal to the High Court. Cl. 3 provides that if an appeal is sought to be preferred from any other order of the District Court made in the exercise of original insolvency jurisdiction, that can only be done by leave of the District Court or the High Court. But cl. 1 of sec. 75 which deals with appeals to the District Court from orders made in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction by a Court subordinate to a District Court, imposes no restriction and makes no enumeration of the orders from which alone an appeal will lie. The question for consideration is whether any order and every order made by an insolvency Court subordinate to a District Court is appealable, or whether there are limits to the right of appeal. Sec. 5 of the Act says: "Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Court, in regard to proceedings under the Act, shall have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction." It is perhaps questionable if any useful guidance is to be sought for on the question under consideration from the language of sec. 5. Firstly, that general provision about the powers and procedure of Insolvency Courts is subject to the provisions of the Insolvency Act and so we come back to where we started from. Secondly, the use of the words "Court" at the beginning and "in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction" at the end, seem to denote that the section deals with the powers and procedure of Courts exercising Original Jurisdiction in insolvency matters, and has little to do with appeals. Now, there are certain orders which are not appealable under the Code of Civil Procedure. Sec. 104 and Or. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code enumerate the various orders from which an appeal will lie, and sec. 104 (1) adds:—"Save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force from no other orders." Here again we have a saving clause providing for appeals where provision is made therefor by any other law for the time being in force. Let us take a concrete case where no appeal lies under the Code of Civil Procedure. Suppose an adjudicated insolvent applies to the insolvency Court for discharge. The creditors are absent and an ex parte order of discharge is made. Then one or more of the creditors apply to the Court to set aside the ex parte order of discharge and it is set aside with a view to enable them to state their objections. Does an appeal lie under sec. 75 (1) to the District Court against such an order? Under the Code of Civil Procedure such an order would not be appealable. Even in the case of a decree, an order under Or. 9, r. 13 rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte would be appealable under Or. 43, r. 1 (d); but an order allowing such an application would not be appealable. If sec. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to be regarded as complete and self-contained, and unfettered by any of the conditions as to appeal laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, then it might be contended that an order like that would be appealable under the Insolvency Act, though a similar order to which the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are applicable would not be appealable. What is the proper construction of sec. 75?

On the whole, the more reasonable construction appears to be that an order which is not appealable under the Code of Civil Procedure would not become appealable, simply because it is passed in a matter arising in insolvency jurisdiction—and for the following reasons:—

1. The policy of the Insolvency Act itself appears to be to restrict the right of appeal and place it within well-defined limits and not to leave the door wide open for anybody who may feel aggrieved by any order passed in insolvency jurisdiction though the order merely touches a question of procedure and does not finally dispose of the rights of parties to go through to the Appellate Court and reargue the matter there. Cls. 2 and 3 of sec. 75 show that this is the true intent of the legislature, viz., to restrict the right of appeal and not to enlarge it.

2. What little of judicial authority there is on the point is also to the same effect. See Mahomed Haji Essack v. Shaik Abdul Rahman, 40 B. 461. That was a case under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. Sec. 8 (2) of that Act uses language as wide as we find in cl. 1 of sec. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Sec. 8 (2) says: "Orders in insolvency matters shall at the instance of any person aggrieved be subject to appeal as follows . . ." In construing sec. 8 (2) Scott, C. J., in 40 B. 461 says: "It does not appear to us that the legislature wished to put any limitation upon appeals made from original orders of a Judge except perhaps orders regulating procedure." This makes possible an interpretation of the section which does not conflict with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. A judicial decision of a matter arising in insolvency is appealable alike under sec. 75 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and sec. 8 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act; but an order merely touching procedure would be governed as regards appealability by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this view the conflict between the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and the Insolvency Act is more apparent than real.

3. Again if the Insolvency Act were to be regarded as a self-contained Code, containing within its four corners all provisions as to appeals in insolvency matters, no appeal will lie in insolvency matters to the Privy Council, because the Insolvency Act makes no provision for it. In 40 C. 685, Chatrapat Singh v. Kharag Singh, an argument of that kind was advanced, namely, that the effect of secs. 46 and 47 of Act III of 1907 corresponding to secs. 5 and 75 of Act V of 1920 was, if anything, to negative the right of appeal to the Privy Council. But Jenkins, C. J., held, "I do not so read the Insolvency Act. In my opinion by that Act, there was no intention to interfere with any right of appeal to the Privy Council that might otherwise exist." The analogy of this decision suggests that neither does the Act confer any right of appeal which is negated by the general law as contained in the Code of Civil Procedure.

4. In 45 M. 31—In the matter of Chidambara Chetty, there was a conflict between the provisions of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and those of the Madras Estates Land Act. Sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act provides for the determination by the insolvency Court of all questions relating to debts due by third parties to the insolvent. Sec. 189 of the Madras Estates Land Act debars Civil Courts exercising Original Jurisdiction from taking cognisance of any dispute or matter in respect of which a suit or application might be made to a revenue Court. In that case the Official Assignee applied to the Judge sitting in insolvency for an order against a raiyat for payment of kist due to the insolvent. It was held that the insolvency Court could not pass any such order and that sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act cannot override sec. 189 of the Madras Estates Land Act. The ratio decidendi of this case also points to the same result, viz., that sec. 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act cannot override the provisions as to appeal laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure, especially inasmuch as the language of the section does not clearly point to such a construction.

By RADHAROMON MOOKERJEE, Vakil,
BERHAMPORE.

Introduction.

In some of its recent decisions [e.g.—Mahammad v. Satyesh, 26 C. W. N. clxx (1922), Radha v. Nitai, 38 C. L. J. 147 (1923), Narendra v. Abdul, 27 C. W. N. clxxv (1923) and Barada v. Faijuddi, 28 C. W. N. cxv : s. c. 39 C. L. J. 428 (1924)], the Calcutta High Court has denied the unrecognised purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding the right to deposit in Court the amount of the rent-decree in order to save it from being sold in execution thereof. Previously the case of Ahmadulla v. Hakaru, 22 C. L. J. 106 : s. c. 18 C. W. N. cccxxi, Ahmadulla v. Prayag, 20 C. W. N. 39 (1914) was the only one decided after, and on a consideration of the ruling of the Full Bench of that Court in Dayamayi v. Ananda, 20 C. L. J. 52 : s. c. 18 C. W. N. 971 ; I. L. R. 42 Cal. 172 (1914), in which his right was fully recognised. Since then, however, a Special Bench of the Patna High Court in the case of Mahadeo v. Langat, 2 P. L. J. 457 (1917), held that he had not the right. But so far as the Calcutta High Court was concerned the case of Ahmadulla v. Hakaru was practically the governing authority for a period of about eight years till 1922 when again for the first time in that year it expressed the contrary view in Mahammad v. Satyesh, 26 C. W. N. clxx. As the matter is of great practical importance in the Mofussil inasmuch as it will affect very materially the sale of agricultural holdings, it is necessary to discuss fully the grounds on which the High Court has changed its opinion.

Persons entitled to deposit under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act.

The persons who are entitled to deposit the decretal amount have been stated in sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act to be "the judgment-debtor, or any person having in the holding any interest voidable on the sale."

To enable the purchaser to avail himself of the provision it is necessary that he should come within one of these categories.

The "judgment-debtor" mentioned there has been explained to be a person against whom the decree under execution has been obtained. It does not include a person who purchased the holding from the recorded tenant long before the rent-suit, although he is likely to be affected by the sale which may ultimately be held in execution of the decree. [Tarak v. Harish, 16 C. L. J. 548: s. c. 17 C. W. N. 163].

Is his interest in holding voidable?

The only other class of persons who is given the right is the person whose interest in the holding is voidable on the sale. To entitle the purchaser to come within that class it must be shewn that he has an interest in the holding, and that if so, that interest is voidable on the sale. [Jugal v. Srinath, 12 C. L. J. 609].

Assuming that he has an interest in the holding, the question is whether it is voidable.

According to Doss, J., of Calcutta High Court, and Patna High Court, Interest to be voidable must be incumbrance.

The answer to this question depends upon the right which an auction-purchaser at the rent-execution-sale acquires in the holding. These have been dealt with in Chap. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which appears to be self-contained, so far as the present question is concerned. [Mahadeo v. Langat, 2 P. L. J. 457, S. B. Per Chamier, C. J.]. He acquires the holding with power to annul the interests which are described as "incumbrances." [Secs. 161 and 159]. The word "annul," as used in sec. 159, means, according to some, the same thing as the word "avoid" implied in the word "voidable" as used in sec. 170 (3). And probably it was this that led Doss, J., of the Calcutta High Court as early as 1908, to express for the first time the opinion that "the words 'any person having in the tenure or holding an interest voidable on the sale' mean any person who has in the tenure or holding an incumbrance, as defined in sec. 161, Bengal Tenancy Act." [Behari v. Fakir, 12 C. W. N. ccxxxi]. This was merely echoed and amplified by Chamier, C. J., of the Patna High Court recently in the case of Rameswar v. Raghunandan, 1 P. L. J. 403 (1916) and reiterated by him in the Special Bench decision of the same Court in the case of Mahadeo v. Langat, 2 P. L. J. 457 (1917) in the following words:—"It seems to me . . . that the only interests which are 'voidable on the sale' within the meaning of sec. 170 are those interests which can be avoided by means of an application under sec. 167, and that the only interests which can be avoided by means of such an application are the interests defined in sec. 161 as 'incumbrances'." Hence, according to this view, the "interests voidable on the sale," referred to in sec. 170 (3), are those interests which are "incumbrances" within the meaning of sec. 161, [Rameswar v. Raghunandan, 1 P. L. J. 403], or, in other words, "the incumbrance-holders whose interests are voidable on the sale are the only persons who are entitled to make the deposit." [Per Sharfuddin, J., in Mahadeo v. Langat, 2 P. L. J. 457, S. B.].

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
Sir,

Will you kindly publish the following few lines in your much esteemed journal?

Sec. 360, Cr. P. C., lays down the procedure in regard to evidence taken under sec. 356, Cr. P. C. This latter section does not apply to Summons Cases and "to offences mentioned in sub-sec. (1) of sec. 260, Cr. P. C., clauses (b) to (m), both inclusive, when tried by a magistrate of the 1st or 2nd class," and "to proceedings under sec. 514, Cr. P. C., if not in the course of a trial." For these cases, offences and proceedings, provision is made in sec. 355, Cr. P. C., under which the magistrate is to make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as the examination of the witness proceeds. Sec. 358, Cr. P. C., makes it optional for the magistrate in cases under sec. 355, Cr. P. C., to take down the evidence of any witness in the manner provided in sec. 356, Cr. P. C. Now, what would be the procedure about recording evidence of witnesses in a case under sec. 457, I. P. C., [lurking house-trespass or house-breaking by night in order to the commission of any offence punishable with imprisonment—an offence mentioned in sec. 260 (1) (i), Cr. P. C.] when the trying magistrate elects to proceed under sec. 358, Cr. P. C.? Would sec. 360, Cr. P. C., apply?

It may be suggested that sec. 360, Cr. P. C., does not contemplate Summary Trials, and that if a case under sec. 457, I. P. C., is tried in a non-summary way, it must apply. If this was really the intention of the Legislature, suitable words might have been employed to convey such a meaning. Sec. 355, Cr. P. C., speaks of offences mentioned in sub-sec (1) of sec. 260, cls. (b) to (m), Cr. P. C. It is perfectly silent about Summary Trials. Besides, a 2nd class magistrate has no power to try any offence summarily. Again, though sec. 357, Cr. P. C., is mentioned in sec. 360, Cr. P. C., sec. 358 is not. If the Legislature intended otherwise, sec. 358, Cr. P. C., might as well be added after the words "sec. 357" in sub-sec. (1) of sec. 360, Cr. P. C. The Legislature omitted sec. 358, Cr. P. C., from that section deliberately with a purpose. If this view is correct, then in the trial of such a case, i.e., a case under sec. 457, I. P. C., which provides imprisonment of either description for five years and fine, the magistrate may make only a memorandum of the evidence of each witness. The result will be far from satisfactory. The point is very doubtful and difficulties have already arisen. Will you or any one of your numerous correspondents come forward and throw some light on it?

I have, etc.,

ADMISSIBILITY OF PLEADINGS AS PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir,

I shall be highly obliged if you will kindly publish the following in your much esteemed journal. I expect that the question will receive your consideration and also that of your learned readers.

Among the public documents as defined in sec. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act, the records of Courts of justice and other judicial writings also constitute public documents.

Mr. Best says in his Evidence, 4th Edition, p. 301, that among public documents of judicial nature but not of record may be mentioned various forms of inquisitions, depositions, examinations, writs, pleadings, etc.

Again says Mr. Taylor that pleadings in an action may be proved either by producing the originals or by means of copies filed with the officer of the Court [R. v. Scott, (1877) 2 Q. B. D. 415]—Taylor, 10th edition, sec. 1586, pp. 1137-38.

This shows that pleadings may be proved by certified copies.

Pleadings mean plaint or written statement (Or. 6, r. 1, C. P. C.).

Having regard to the opinions of the text writers and the principles enunciated in Bhagata Meghram v. Gooroo Pershad, 25 W. R. 68 and Mangal Sen v. Hira Sing, 1 A. L. J. 101, a certified copy of plaint is admitted in evidence under sec. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act apparently on the ground that being a part of the record, it is a public document [Mahomed Shahabuddin v. Wedgberry, 10 B. L. R. App. 31].

Although the plaint is admitted as a public document, written statement which is as good a pleading as the plaint is not treated as such and the principle on which this technical distinction is made does not at all seem to be clear.

As regards the nature, signing, verification, striking out or amendment of pleadings and many other matters connected therewith, the same provisions of law as laid down in the Civil Procedure Code equally apply to both plaint and written statement (vide Or. 6, rr. 2, 14, 15, 16 and 17, C. P. C.).

The only obvious distinction that exists between the plaint and written statement is that the former is chargeable with Court-fees but the latter is not (except in the case of one claiming set-off) but that cannot possibly and reasonably mark any difference between them as to the application of principle of their admissibility as public documents as being of judicial nature.

Sometimes it becomes very necessary to confront a party litigant with his written statement filed in a different suit of different Court of different jurisdiction, setting up quite a contrary story in respect of the similar, identical or connected subject-matters forming the points at issue in the two suits but it does not become always possible to procure, before the date of hearing, a certified copy of that written statement, to file it and call for the original and summon and produce the persons competent to prove the original without much trouble and expense and further adjournment from the Court for the purpose which is seldom granted at such a stage and the idea of proving the original becomes out of question when the hearing commences and the knowledge of such written statement reaches the party intending to prove it in the midst of hearing.

The result follows that the party to be confronted with his written statement as aforesaid goes quite unchallenged and free, making with impunity different versions at different times according to exigencies of circumstances to suit his purpose and convenience.

The difficulty standing in the way of proving the written statement by the original seems to be serious and responsible for the abuses that are made thereof and it can only be obviated if the written statement also is declared as a public document just like the plaint for the reasons stated above so that a party may prove the original by the production of the certified copy.

Yours truly,

UPENDRANARAYAN CHOUDHURY, B.L.,

The late Mr. Edwin Samuel Montagu.

It is a great pity that the career of such a brilliant and promising statesman and a great friend of India should have come to a sudden close in the prime of his life. In the history of British connection with India, very likely the future Indian historian will assign to the late Mr. Montagu a higher place than to the British generals and statesmen who established and consolidated British rule in India. What men like Munro, Macaulay, Metcalfe, Bentinck, Canning, Ripon and Hardinge (names held in high esteem in India) dreamed of and pondered for over a century, this young and brilliant Englishman, with a heritage of eastern and western culture, rare foresight and broad sympathies, carried into partial execution within a couple of years when placed at the helm of Indian affairs at a very critical time of the world's history. Arm-chair critics and platform politicians are apt to forget the world situation and the part that India played during the Great War against autocracy. How could a responsible Minister of the Crown or the Parliament perpetuate autocracy in India then or thereafter? India spared neither blood nor money to save the liberty-loving people of the west from annihilation. India had for many decades before the war been demanding the right of full and free citizenship in the British Empire. In spite of some restlessness amongst the younger generation, the more sober and maturer minds in India decided not to take any mean advantage of the then British embarrassment and co-operated whole-heartedly for preserving the integrity of the British Empire. It is the Indian troops who guarded the British Empire in the east and chiefly contributed to the victory of British arms in Egypt, Palestine, Mesopotamia, East Africa and made immense sacrifices in Gallipoli.

Nor were their services less momentous for saving the liberty and freedom of France and the British Isles. But for them Paris would have fallen and Calais would have been captured and it is too horrible to contemplate with what consequences! It speaks for the high statesmanship of Mr. Montagu and his colleagues and the good sense of the British Parliament that they initiated, in the midst of such serious troubles, a proposal for the conferment of responsible Government, partial though it was on India. The memorable declaration of the 20th of August 1917 was a deliberate pronouncement of the British Cabinet, and Mr. Montagu was but its mouth-piece. Lord Curzon drafted it for the Cabinet and Mr. Chamberlain may also claim credit in common with the Cabinet for initiating a policy which was so faithfully and wisely carried out by his illustrious successor.

But the great achievement of Mr. Montagu was that within a year of the memorable declaration, he with his rare ability, energy and capacity for work completed his enquiry and formulated his scheme in a report of exceptional merit and interest. It must not be forgotten that the report which bears such evidence of deep thought and study, sound judgment, high sense of responsibility, rare power of exposition and a high order of literary merit, and which in fact would perpetuate his memory in Indian history, was drawn up at a time when the fate of Europe was still hanging in the balance, as would appear from the following memorable words with which the report concluded:—
" . . . Far greater issues still hang in the balance upon the battle-fields of France. It is there and not in Delhi or Whitehall that the ultimate decision of India's future will be taken." The war was won and India could claim no small share of the honours of victory. Mr. Montagu tried only honestly to fulfil the pledges given by Parliament.

The Government of India Act was drafted by Parliamentary draftsmen to give effect to the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. The draft Bill was settled by a Joint Parliamentary Committee, over which Lord Selborne presided, after prolonged discussion with leaders of public opinion from all parts of India. Mr. Montagu took an active interest in the discussions at the Committee stage of the Bill and after it emerged in a cut and dried form from the Committee, Mr. Montagu piloted it through Parliament with that tact, judgment and eloquence for which he was noted. Lord Sinha acted as its sponsor in the House of Lords where he too received a kind and sympathetic response. It is not for us to review the merits and drawbacks of the Government of India Act on the present occasion. But no one who has studied it can deny that with all its shortcomings it is a very remarkable piece of legislation. Dyarchy may be a novel experiment, which may have failed, but the Act makes provision at the same time how provincial autonomy may be granted without any amendment of the Act. Sec. 19A similarly provides how the Government of India may be relieved of the overlordship of the Secretary of State and his Council. A very material drawback of it is that it does not provide for any present or future responsibility of the Government of India to the Legislature and creates a further 'anomaly' that while the people's representatives command the majority of votes in the Legislature, the official minority wield the executive power.

This anomaly of the constitution is bound to create constant friction between the executive and the legislature. All the same, we believe, such defects and drawbacks would have been much more readily removed by a show of reason than by unreasoned obstruction or any suggestions of force or violence. The present unsatisfactory relationship between the Legislature and the executive is but a passing phase of constitutional struggle between the two, which have been known to have resulted in much more serious conflicts in the course of the development of the constitution in the self-governing Dominions. Such political ebullitions, as are now noticeable in India, would not have disturbed the robust faith of Mr. Montagu in the good sense of India and should not perturb any statesman of his ilk and calibre. So the death of Mr. Montagu at the present moment is not only a great loss to India but to English public life as well.

There are few Englishmen who have been able to enter into the different phases of public life in India so thoroughly as Mr. Montagu did during his short term of office as Secretary of State for India. It now stands vindicated by history that in the unfortunate difference with Lord Curzon over which he resigned, he was also eminently in the right. He was perfectly within his rights to publish the views of the Government of India after he had mentioned the matter to Lord Curzon at a meeting of the Cabinet held on the 6th of March 1922 and to which Lord Curzon did not object as was later on admitted by himself. His Lordship did not then take any exception to it, because, he says, he was "dumbfounded." No one who has read the letter which Lord Curzon wrote to Mr. Montagu afterwards can doubt that it was meant more as a reflection on the Governor-General of India than on Mr. Montagu. It suggested that Lord Reading by making a pronouncement with regard to Indian Moslem view regarding the treaty of Sevres had unjustifiably meddled in matters of foreign policy of the Government of Europe for which he deserved to be recalled and the noble Lord reminded Mr. Montagu that for a much less indiscretion during his own Viceroyalty he had been rebuked. His Lordship considered it intolerable that a "subordinate," . . . "six thousand miles away" should "dictate" to him what policy he was to pursue at the Paris Conference held for the revision of the treaty of Sevres. It is for lending his moral support to the pronouncement of the Government of India, who voiced the views of the Indian Moslems, that Mr. Montagu, as a man of honour and the responsible head of the Indian administration, resigned. The Treaty of Lausanne testifies to the political foresight of Mr. Montagu which eventually received international recognition. It is in the service of India that he sacrificed his health and a promising parliamentary career, and all India pays him to-day her homage of high esteem and deep gratitude.

Implied warranty of habitability of a furnished house.

In the case of an unfurnished house there is ordinarily no warranty of fitness for occupation. The rule is different with respect to furnished houses or apartments. In such a case the law implies in the absence of agreement to the contrary a warranty by the landlord as to the state and fitness of the premises. As far back as 1843 in Smith v. Marrable, 11 M. & W. 5, 7, 9, it was held that the Defendant was entitled to repudiate the tenancy of a furnished house on the ground that it was infested with bugs. Chief Baron Lord Abinger held, "A man who lets a ready furnished house surely does so under the implied condition or obligation that the house is in a fit state to be inhabited." The same view was held in Wilson v. Finch Hatton, (1877, 2 Ex. D. 336); Bird v. Lord Greville, (1884, Cab. & El. 317); Charsley v. Jones, (1889, 5 Times L. R. 412). Humphreys v. Miller, (1917, 2 K. B. 122), dealt with a converse case and there it was held that there is no implied warranty on the taking of furnished lodgings that the intending tenant is a fit and proper person to occupy them and that he is not suffering from an infectious disease. As to the meaning of the expression "fit for habitation" it must vary with the circumstances to which it is applied. In Collins v. Hopkins, (1923) 2 K. B. 617, the question was raised as to the contractual duty of a person who lets a furnished house lately occupied by one suffering from an infectious disease. The Defendant let to the Plaintiff a furnished house for twenty-six weeks at 6½ guineas a week. The Plaintiff entered into residence with his wife, his daughter and his domestic maids. On the day after he entered he discovered that the Defendant's husband while suffering from pulmonary consumption had recently resided in the house and was then in Switzerland under treatment for that complaint.

The Plaintiff at once repudiated the agreement of tenancy and quitted the house on the ground that it was not reasonably fit for habitation and that the Defendant had therefore broken her implied warranty. He claimed damages including the amount paid by him in advance as rent for thirteen weeks. Judgment was given for the Plaintiff. It was observed: "In the case of unclean furnished or defective drains or a nuisance by vermin the matter is not as a rule one of difficulty. The eye or the nostrils can detect the fault and measure its extent. But in the case of a house lately occupied by a person suffering from an infectious disease the eye and other senses are of no avail. The bacilli of infection are not apparent to the eye. Yet a peril is none the less grave because it is hidden. . . . It is not enough for the landlord to say that he honestly believes that the house is fit and proper for safe habitation. It must in fact be fit and safe. The mere belief of the landlord is not the point."

Smith v. Marrable has been explained as proceeding on the idea that furniture was the principal thing in the contemplation of the parties and the chief subject of warranty but in subsequent cases the nuisance was independent of the furniture.

In the United States one case has followed Smith v. Marrable on practically identical facts (Ingalls v. Hobbs, 156 Mass. 348), but otherwise the English doctrine has been flatly rejected or criticised and distinguished on various grounds. The following comments in Harvard Law Review on Collins v. Hopkins are worth quoting:—"The most plausible justification proposed for the Smith v. Marrable doctrine is that both parties intend that the house shall be fit for immediate occupation. Acceptance of this reasoning would obscure the broad distinction based upon furniture and would make the presence of furniture unimportant except as evidence binding to show that the premises were let for immediate habitation. If there is an implied warranty of habitability it should not be confined to furnished houses. The limitation to furnished houses can be justified only as an effort comparatively unsuccessful to attain certainty. Collins v. Hopkins exaggerates the necessity of protecting the tenant from the rigour of caveat emptor. He can examine the premises and exact express warranties.

Moreover where a landlord knows of a latent defect rendering premises unhealthful or dangerous he has a duty of disclosure in letting them. But this liability has just limits suggestive of a standard of due care under the circumstances."

BY RADHAROMON MOOKERJEE, VAKIL,
BERHAMPORE.

The question, therefore, is whether the interest acquired by the purchaser in the holding by his purchase is an "incumbrance." The term has been fully explained in sec. 161, and considering the nature of the rights indicated therein, the sale of an entire holding cannot, by any stretch of argument, be regarded as such. And although there might have been at a time foundation for the contention that the sale of a part of a holding is so, the matter may now be considered to have been finally settled [Abdul v. Ahmadar, I. L. R. 43 Cal. 558 : s. c. 19 C. W. N. 1217 (1915)]. Thus, the interest of a purchaser of the whole or a part of a holding is not an incumbrance, and it is not, therefore, voidable on the sale. In that view he is not entitled to make the deposit under sec. 170 (3).

Contrary view of Mookerjee, J., of Calcutta High Court—Protection in sec. 170 (3) not limited to incumbrances.

But, as pointed out by Mookerjee, J., of the Calcutta High Court, in Tarak v. Harish, 16 C. L. J. 548 : s. c. 17 C. W. N. 163 (1912) :—"The expression used by the Legislature [in sec. 170 (3)] is 'interest voidable on the sale,' and not 'incumbrance voidable on the sale under the provisions of Chap. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act'." The term "interest" used there is wider and more comprehensive than the term "incumbrance," and includes rights other than those falling within the narrow limits of sec. 161 (which defines "incumbrance"). Chap. XIV does not in terms say that the words "interest" and "incumbrance" are synonymous and there is no reason why we should strain its language and give the word "interest" a meaning which it does not ordinarily possess. On the other hand, the obvious object of the provisions precludes the idea that it should be narrowly construed. Thus, the weight of authority is wholly in favour of the view that the protection afforded by sec. 170 (3) is not limited to incumbrances.

GHOSH'S DIARIES FOR 1925. Compiled by J. N. Ghosh; M. C. Sarkar & Sons, Law Book-sellers and Publishers, 90/2A, Harrison Road, Calcutta.

We received last week several specimens of Ghosh's Diaries for 1925. The Lawyer's Diary contains much valuable information which lawyers require for ready reference in the course of their every day work such as regarding stamps and court-fees required for conveyances, mortgages, institution of suits, etc. Some forms are given which may be found useful in drafting. The English, Bengalee, Sambat date, and the dates of public holidays and religious ceremonies observed by different communities are given. Ample space is provided for making daily notes. The prices are cheap, the binding and get-up neat and quality of paper good. The smallest size is very appropriately called the Gem, which contains all the information one ordinarily requires, provides a page for each day and yet is small enough for being put into one's watch pocket. These and other intermediate sizes will be found very useful for all purposes by lawyers and businessmen alike.

REPORTS (See index.)

Have our Jury and Judges been found wanting in State trials?

We have mentioned before that it has been suggested in the resolution of the Government of Bengal in promulgating the Bengal Ordinance framed by His Excellency the Governor-General, that the alleged political offenders cannot be brought to justice because the witnesses, the jury and even the judges are or are likely to be intimidated by their associates. We have mentioned before that the trials, verdicts and sentences in the Sankaritol Post Office murder case and the Day murder case furnish no grounds in support of this view. We shall presently show that neither does the recent Alipur conspiracy case lend any support to it. A part of the prosecution case was that it was in pursuance of a political conspiracy that the Kona dacoity (referred to in the Government resolution) was committed. It transpired in evidence that two zamindars who were murderously assaulted in the course of the alleged dacoity died in hospital. One of them in making a dying declaration mentioned the name of some of the assailants and stated that a family quarrel was the cause of the assault. Some ladies of the family also identified the assailants. The approver who alleged that the dacoity was committed in pursuance of a conspiracy stated that he had driven the taxi cab in which the dacoits had gone to Kona and returned. To test the truthfulness of the approver the jury suggested that the approver should be asked to drive a motor car outside the Court premises. A trial was held and it was found that he did not know at all how to drive a motor car. After this, could any jury or judge believe his story and convict the accused relying on his evidence, which far from being corroborated was contradicted by more reliable witnesses. The learned Sessions Judge did not in the circumstances consider it worth his while to differ from the jury and refer the case to the High Court and thus unnecessarily waste the time of the Hon'ble Judges. This case is very instructive as to the risk of relying on the testimony of approvers unless it is tested and corroborated in a regular judicial trial.

Then with regard to the Chittagong murder case, referred to in the Government resolution, an application was made by the Crown to the High Court of Calcutta for a transfer of the case from Chittagong to some other district alleging that the jurors were likely to be intimidated. The High Court after careful consideration of the statements in support of the application decided that no sufficient grounds had been made out for such transfer. Thus the suggestion that jury in this country, if intimidated, would fail to come to a just finding in cases of persons who may be charged with revolutionary conspiracy or violent crime is without justification, especially, when His Excellency the Governor admits that "there is no spirit of revolt in the hearts of the people of Bengal." The people of Bengal have a high regard for law and justice and it is impolitic to shake their confidence in it.

Those detained under Reg. III of 1818 are not to be tried, nor are those who are to be interned under the discretionary powers of the Executive. As regards Reg. III of 1818, His Excellency the Governor-General in 1922 accepted the recommendations of the Repressive Laws Committee that it should be limited to its original purposes and would not be put into operation against British Indian subjects. Now to resile from the undertaking given by the Government of India, is bound to be regarded by the public as an act of bad faith. When the law Courts are open and are quite competent to deal with such cases we do not consider it wise to put it into operation again. As regards the cases of internment, they follow the drastic provisions of the rules framed under the Defence of India Act at the time of the great war. Public opinion is unequivocal that they are quite out of place in times of peace and persons interned should also be brought to trial. The lessons of history teach us that arrests and incarcerations under Executive orders promote a revolutionary spirit in the people while observance of the rule of law by the Executive Authorities and trials in due course of law not only have a deterrent effect but promote a sense of security in public mind.

It may be said that the Ordinance provides for trial by Commissioners who will ordinarily be persons of judicial experience. Under the Ordinance none of the detainees or internees can claim a trial. Further, trials by Commissioners specially appointed by the executive Government in times of peace, are open to serious objections. When His Excellency the Governor has repeatedly pronounced the arrested persons to be guilty and declared the evidence to be conclusive, on no sound judicial principle ought they to be tried by a commission nominated by the Executive Government. It should not be overlooked that public opinion in Bengal has demanded for the last fifty years the separation of executive and judicial functions. The Committee over which Mr. Justice Greaves presided only recently formulated a scheme for such separation which could not be carried into effect for want of public funds. Public opinion in this Presidency is therefore opposed to the setting up of commissions by the Executive and manning them with members of the subordinate judiciary and ousting the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts of law for the trial of political offenders. The enlightened public in Bengal is as constitutional in spirit as the British public and naturally they object to the Executive departing from the rule of law. We protest in the same spirit.

It is with a very just pride that we can claim that the High Court of Calcutta, which is independent of the Local Government, has maintained the high traditions of British justice. His Excellency the Governor bore testimony to this in his recent speech at Dinajpur. His Excellency said: "We cannot use the High Court except in its judicial capacity. The service of examining in secret our evidence and advising us as to its reliability is an executive service which cannot be performed by Judges of the High Court. It is not our unwillingness to consult them, but their unwillingness to serve in this capacity which precludes us from resorting to Judges of the High Court." We say, all honour to His Majesty's Judges. In all fairness we must also say that the jury and judges of the Courts subordinate to the High Court have seldom been found wanting in the due discharge of their duties. We see no reason why the Government cannot rely on them for bringing offenders to justice regardless of fear and favour in State trials.

We may mention in this connection that the Punjab Government had to deal with very serious unrest, terrorism and civil commotion during recent years and yet two successive provincial Governors, who have been members of the Indian Civil Service, never approached the Government of India for the issue of Ordinances and any extraordinary powers thereunder. The Governor of the United Provinces, also a member of the Indian Civil Service, has also preferred to rely on the ordinary law and law Courts in bringing persons associated with a highly dangerous type of conspiracy to justice and thus furnishing convincing proof of its existence; and no exception has been taken by the public to the course adopted by the Governor. We feel therefore that the Ordinance is a blot on the fair fame of Bengal of which the Government ought to be as jealous as we are.

Vakils and Attorneys enrolled as Advocates in Calcutta.

We accord our welcome to the members of the sister profession who were for the first time enrolled as advocates of the Calcutta High Court in the course of last week. Formerly none but English barristers, Scotch and Irish advocates were entitled to be enrolled as advocates of the Calcutta High Court. They had also the exclusive privilege of pleading on the Original Side of the Court. When a Bill was introduced in the Legislative Assembly for conferring equal privileges on all vakils and attorneys of pleading on the Original Side of the Court, we suggested that the wiser course would be for the High Court to frame rules for the enrolment of advocates by reference to their standing than for the Legislature to undertake legislation in such matters. The Legislature is, surely, competent to make any laws it chooses. But in England, the Parliament would never think of undertaking legislation with regard to matters in respect of which the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court have enjoyed the exclusive privilege from early times. The enrolment of counsel and solicitors have always been a concern of the Judges and very rightly so. The charters under which the High Courts in India were established gave powers to the Judges of the Hon'ble Courts following the time-honoured practice of the High Court of England. We therefore regarded any legislation in this behalf as contrary to the recognised principles of English law and practice and suggested that the Hon'ble Judges should frame rules for extending the privileges to qualified lawyers of standing in this country. We are glad that the Bar Committee made similar recommendations and we convey our congratulations to the Hon'ble Judges and our brother members of the legal profession that the rules have been amended and that they have been placed on the same footing as English barristers and Scotch and Irish advocates in the Calcutta High Court.

First Lady Advocate of Calcutta.

On Monday last before Mr. Justice Pearson, Miss Cornelia Sorabji was sworn in as an advocate of the High Court. She is the first lady barrister on the rolls of the Court. In England women have been admitted to practise in the Courts of law and in this country also the law relating to legal practitioners has been amended so as to remove the disability on the part of women. Some years ago the late Miss Regina Guha applied for being enrolled as a vakil. The matter was argued before a Special Bench and the Hon'ble Judges on an examination of the history of the legal profession in this country refused to accept the contention advanced on her behalf by Mr. Eardley Norton that in the Legal Practitioners Act, as in all other statutes, words denoting the masculine gender should be construed to include the feminine. The legislature, however, has now removed all ambiguity and doubt with regard to the question. The Calcutta Municipal Act, which we owe to the last labours of the political guru of India, is remarkable in many respects in the history of legislation in this country and amongst its progressive, liberal and democratic provisions, we note that it placed women on a footing of equality with men. The Corporation of Calcutta has now got its first lady councillor. In Bombay, we believe the election rules have been amended to permit women to vote and offer themselves for election in the Provincial Council. In Madras an Indian lady has been appointed to take her seat in the Children's Court. Thus India is keeping pace with the times.

By RADHAROMON MOOKERJEE, VAKIL,
BERHAMPORE.

According to some purchaser's "interest is void and not voidable on sale."

Even if that is so the question still remains for answer—whether the interest of the purchaser is otherwise "voidable on the sale." And considering the nature of the interest acquired by him, it has been contended that it is void and not voidable, as required by the section. This has been sought to be shewn from different standpoints—that of the purchaser himself, of the landlord, and of the auction-purchaser.

(I) Because he acquires no interest by his purchase.

This was based upon the view formerly taken of the nature of the occupancy right itself, namely, that it is "a right personal to the particular raiyat" (himself), and therefore could not be transferred at all. [Narendra v. Ishan, 22 W. R. 22 F. B. (1874), Agarjan v. Panaulla, 12 C. L. J. 169 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 779 ; I. L. R. 37 Cal. 617 (1910)]. Hence, it is not saleable at the instance of the occupancy raiyat or any creditor of his other than the landlord seeking to obtain satisfaction of his decree for arrears of rent. [Bhiram v. Gopi, I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897)]. A purchase of it, therefore, could convey nothing, and not only the landlord, but even the raiyat himself could question the validity of the transfer. [See the referring judgment of Jenkins, C. J. and N. Chatterjea, J., Calcutta High Court, in Dayamayi v. Ananda, 18 C. W. N. 971 : s. c. 20 C. L. J. 52 (F. B.)].

As held in Nalini v. Fulmani, 16 C. W. N. 421 : s. c. 15 C. L. J. 388 (1912).

On the same ground it was held that the purchaser had no right to deposit in Court the amount of the rent-decree under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, and thereby to prevent the sale of the holding in execution thereof. Thus, in the case of Nalini v. Fulmani, 16 C. W. N. 421 : s. c. 15 C. L. J. 388 (1912), which is the leading case on the subject, Stephen, J., of the Calcutta High Court observed :—"We have to consider whether he has any interest in the land, and if he has, whether that interest is voidable on the sale. On the authorities before us I hold that he has no interest in the land. This result in my opinion follows from the decisions of this Court in Nissa v. Radha, 11 C. W. N. 312 (1906) and Prosunno v. Bama, 13 C. W. N. 602 (1909). The two cases together are authority for the statement that he is not 'a representative' of the transferor (judgment-debtor) under sec. 244, or 'the owner of immoveable property' under sec. 311 (of the old Civil Procedure Code.)." In both these cases, it appears that the point was considered as depending on the question whether he had an interest in the judgment-debtor's property which was affected by the decree. It was clear enough that if he had purchased any interest in the judgment-debtor's property that interest was bound by the decree, and he was so far a "representative of the judgment-debtor," and was entitled to apply under sec. 244. The question, therefore, narrowed itself down to this, namely, whether he could be said to have purchased any interest at all in the property. There was authority for the view that the purchase, such as this, could convey nothing. He could not, therefore, be rightly regarded as a representative in the proper sense of the word, and as falling within the provisions of sec. 244, inasmuch as if he bought no interest he had no interest to be affected by the decree. [See also the referring judgment of Coxe and Boss, JJ., in Dayamayi's case.] Further, his Lordship points out :—"It is possible, of course, that (the phrase) 'having any interest' in sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act might be construed as having a wider application than (the phrase) 'the representative of a party to a suit' under sec. 244, or 'the owner of immoveable property' under sec. 311, C. P. C., 1882. But in Ishan v. Beni, I. L. R. 24 Cal. 62 (1896), the authority on which Nissa v. Radha was decided, it seems that as if the classes of persons described in these sections were all the same, as indeed there is no reason why they should not be." Hence, it was held in case that the transferee was not entitled to make the deposit under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, inasmuch as he had no interest in the holding.

Calcutta High Court Full Bench in Dayamayi v. Ananda, 18 C. W. N. 971 :

s. c. 20 C. L. J. 52 (1914) and

Ala, 24 C. W. N. 818 : s. c.

held contrary view.

A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Dayamayi v. Ananda, 18 C. W. N. 971 : s. c. 20 C. L. J. 52 (1914), and a Special Bench of the same Court in the case of Chandra v. Ala, 24 C. W. N. 818 : s. c. 31 C. L. J. 510 (1920) did not, however, accept that view of the nature of the right of occupancy and of the interest acquired by the purchaser. Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Special Bench pointed out :—"Whatever might have been the law earlier, the occupancy raiyat enjoys under the Bengal Tenancy Act substantial rights in the land, and his interest cannot be appropriately described as a merely 'personal right' or 'personal privilege.' The decisions on the question of transferability of occupancy holdings (show) that the validity of the transfer (was) challenged only by the zemindar or by a person claiming through or under him; and this important circumstance must be carefully borne in mind when we meet with the general expressions like 'a right of occupancy cannot be transferred' in cases between landlords and tenants. (Hence) no one appears to have doubted that 'in the event of a transfer, voluntary or involuntary, the landlord was the only person entitled to dispute its validity, if it had been effected without his consent previously taken or assent subsequently obtained' till the year 1897, when for the first time in the decision in the case of Bhiram v. Gopi, I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355, the contrary proposition was enunciated. The grounds of decision in (that case), which was in reality a departure from the law as administered for over sixty years, do not stand the test of criticism. Our conclusion is that it was erroneously decided. The results of the decision are that "a right of occupancy, which is not transferable by custom or local usage, can be transferred," and that "the transfer of the whole or a part thereof is operative against the raiyat, whether it is made voluntarily or involuntarily." The transferee thus acquires a valid title, whether he purchases the holding from the raiyat or at a sale in execution of a decree against him. And consistently with the view thus taken of the purchaser's right it has further been held that he is "a 'representative of the judgment-debtor' (under sec. 244), and is a 'person whose immoveable property has been sold'" (under sec. 311, C. P. C., 1882, especially when he purchases a part of the holding). [See Dayamayi's case.] These decisions shew that "in case of transfer, title unquestionably passes from the transferor to the transferee, even though there is no recognition by the landlord, and although the validity of the transfer is liable to be questioned by their landlord, who is no party to the transaction." [Sehari v. Sindhubala, 22 C. W. N. 210 : s. c. 27 C. L. J. 497 (1917).]

Thanukadi Naicken v. Ramaswami Naicken (Madras).

An application was made in the above suit for special leave to appeal from the judgment of the High Court of Madras. The question on which the applicant desired the decision of the Board was as to the age of majority of an adopting father under the Mitakshara.

The applicant had failed to raise in the lower Courts the point which he wished to raise on appeal, and leave was refused.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Narasimham for the Applicant.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown contra.

Special leave to appeal from Patna was granted in Sunder Mull v. Satya Kinker Sahana.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Macaskie appeared in support of the application which was not opposed.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown applied to this Board for rectification of the order in Council passed in the appeal of

The Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Naresk Narayan Roy. They contended that the date 1903 which appeared in the order as the date from which compensation should be paid had been inserted through inadvertence.

Messrs. Dunn, K. C. and Wallach supported the date and the Board being of opinion that a substantial point was in issue adjourned the application for argument before the Board which had heard the appeal.

Sm. Karimunessa Khatun v. Md. Fazlul Karim, an appeal from Bengal, was argued before the same Board.

Mr. A. Majid for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Hyam for the Respondent.

Oct. 24th.—In the Council Chamber the following Court was constituted:—

LORD DUNEDIN, LORD ATKINSON, MR. AMEER ALI and LORD SALVESEN.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Wallach applied for special leave to appeal from the decision of the Lahore High Court in Umra v. King-Emperor. They contended that the evidence of a co-accused had been wrongly admitted and that there was a substantial miscarriage of justice. Leave was refused—the reasons for the Board's decision are to be given later.

The hearing was continued of Satya Niranjan Chakravarti v. Ram Lal (Patna).

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., Dunne, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellants.

Hearing continued and concluded of Satya Niranjan Chakravarti v. Ram Lal (Patna).

Oct. 24th and 27th.—In the Board Room: Hearing was concluded in Fateh Singh v. Jagannath Bakhsh (Lucknow).

Mr. DeMello for the Appellant.

Mr. Parikh for the 1st Respondent and Mr. Dubé for the 2nd Respondent were not called upon.

The question for decision is whether the doctrine of res judicata is applicable to the Appellant's claim.

Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Pershad (Oudh).

In this appeal the sons of a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara sought to set aside an alienation made by their father. Two of the Plaintiffs were born after the alienation. The Indian Courts held that the suit was barred by limitation. Judgment was reserved.

Mr. Dubé for the Appellant ex parte.

In the Council Chamber before the Board presided over by LORD DUNEDIN Mr. Parikh instructed by Mr. Delgado applied for an adjournment of the appeal in the present list, Ahmed Khan v. Ali Ebrahim Noor (Aden). The application was opposed by Mr. Raikes and was refused, but their Lordships permitted the case to be placed at the bottom of the list. A similar application was made by Mr. Narasimham and a postponement was again refused in Gutta Bhadrappa v. Kalagara Kanakamma (Madras).

Oct. 28th.—The hearing was commenced of the appeal Maina Bibi v. Wasi Ahmad (Allahabad).

The Appellant, a Mahomedan lady, took possession of her husband's estate on his death in lieu of her unpaid dower. Certain heirs of the deceased obtained a decree for possession of their shares in the estate on payment of the proportionate amount of dower due from them, failing which payment, their suit to stand dismissed. The money was not paid, and Maina Bibi parted with the property by a "hiba biltamlik." The Plaintiffs then brought the present suit for possession of the property. The questions for determination are whether the suit was barred by res judicata, and as to the right of a Mahomedan widow in possession of her husband's estate in lieu of dower to alienate it. The hearing of the appeal is proceeding.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and K. Brown for the Appellant.

In the Board Room :

Oct. 27th and 28th. Palani Ammal v. M. Moniagar (Madras) raised a question as to whether there had been a partition of joint family property.

Mr. Dubé for the Appellant.

Mr. Wallach for the Respondent.

During the argument the question as to the admissibility of the appeal was raised on the ground of concurrent findings of fact in the lower Courts. The argument for the Appellant was concluded and the Board intimated that they would inform counsel for the Respondent should they require any argument from him.

Before the same Board Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Bryan Farrer appeared ex parte in the appeal, Graham v. Krishna Ch. Dey (Bengal). The suit was instituted by the Respondent for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land in Tollygunge. The Appellant was owner of part only of the property which he had contracted to sell. The question for determination was whether having regard to the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, the Respondent was entitled to specific performance of part of the contract. The argument was concluded and judgment reserved.

Oct. 29th.—An application was made to a Board composed of LORDS ATKINSON and BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI for rectification of the Order in Council in the appeal, Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Naresh Narayan Roy (Bengal). Judgment had been given in favour of the Respondents and compensation was awarded them for a period of 9 years during which they had been excluded from possession of the property in dispute.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants contended that the date June 1903 from which compensation had been allowed had been inserted by inadvertence, that the Respondents were claiming mesne profits and that in law they were not entitled to such. In any event the longest possible time during which compensation could be claimed was 6 years. They referred to Art. 120 of the Limitation Act and to Watson & Co. v. Ram Chand Dutt (17 I. A. 110, 118, 122), Batul Begum v. Mansur Ali Khan (L. R. 28 I. A. 248, 254) and Watson & Co. v. R. C. Dutt (I. L. R. 23 Cal. 799).

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Wallach for the Respondents contended that no limitation applied. The Board decided that 6 years was the period of limitation under Art. 120 and ordered the date 8th August 1906 to be substituted for June 1903 in the Order in Council.

BENGAL TENANCY ACT, SEC. 170 (3)—INTEREST VOIDABLE ON SALE.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

May we crave the hospitality of your columns and request you to insert the following few lines in your most esteemed journal

Sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, provides that "the judgment-debtor or any person having in the tenure or holding any interest voidable on the sale, may pay money into Court under this section."

Some discussion took place in Council on the subject of this provision and its object was more fully explained as follows:—

The intention of the framers of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, with regard to sales of tenures or holdings for arrears of rent was that any one having in the tenure or holding an interest voidable on the sale, (e.g., a mortgagee or an unrecognised transferee), might pay in the decretal amount with costs before and so stop the sale. This is provided for in sec 170 (3). But it was intended that after the sale only the judgment-debtor should have the privilege of having the sale set aside by paying up the decretal amount and costs with compensation to the auction-purchaser of 5 per cent of his purchase-money. The object of these provisions was to induce persons having an interest in the property to be sold to pay in the amount of the landlord's debt before the sale. So that the landlord (decree-holder) might get the money due to him quickly and the matter might be settled and set at rest once for all . . . (Rampini's Tenancy Act, 4th Ed., p. 533).

Thus by the words "any one having in the tenure or holding any interest voidable on the sale" they meant and included "a mortgagee or an unrecognised transferee."

Now there has been a good number of conflicting rulings on the point.

In Tarakdas Pal Chowdhury v. Haris Chandra Banerjee, 17 C. W. N. 163, Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., held that an unrecognised purchaser has an interest in the holding which is voidable on the sale and is therefore entitled to deposit under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act.

In Ahamadullah Chowdhury v. Prayag Sahu, 20 C. W. N. 39, D. Chatterjee and Walmsley, JJ., held that an unregistered purchaser of non-transferable occupancy holding has an interest in the holding which is voidable on the sale and is entitled to deposit under sec. 170 (3).

In Jote Kumar Mukherjee v. Monohar Mukherjee, 50 Indian Cases 596, Fletcher and Walmsley, JJ., following the decisions as reported in 17 C. W. N. 163 and 20 C. W. N. 39, held that the unrecognised transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding is entitled to make a deposit.

But in Nalini Behary Ray v. Fulmani Dasi, 16 C. W. N. 421, Stephen and Coxe, JJ., held that a transferee of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom has no interest in the holding and is not entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170 (3).

In Maharaja Sir Rameswar Singh v. Raghunandan Khawas, 38 I. C. 337, Chief Justice Champier relying on the decision as reported in 16 C. W. N. 421, held that an unregistered transferee of an entire occupancy holding is not a person having in the holding an interest voidable on the sale. His Lordship also remarked that the interests voidable on the sale referred to in sec. 170 (3) are those interests which are incumbrances within the meaning of sec. 161.

Next the point was referred to a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh, 40 I. C. 257, where it was held that the transferee of a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom is not a person who has in the holding advertised for sale an interest voidable on the sale. Champier, C. J., remarked that the only interests "which are voidable on the sale" within the meaning of sec. 170 are those interests which can be avoided by means of an application under sec. 167 and that the only interests which can be avoided by such an application are the interests defined in sec. 161 as incumbrances. Justices Chapman, Atkinson and Sharfuddin concurred with the Chief Justice. But Mullick, J., dissenting, delivered a very learned and elaborate judgment. His Lordship dealt with all the cases on the point, both for and against.

In Barada Prasad Ray Chowdhury v. Foijuddi Haldar, 28 C. W. N. 125 (notes), the same question arose and it was pressed by the opposite party that having regard to the conflict of decisions the question should be referred to a Full Bench. But Newbould and B. B. Ghose, JJ., following the decisions as reported in 16 C. W. N. 421, 26 C. W. N. 170 (notes), 27 C. W. N. 175 (notes) did not think it necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench and held that a purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding is not a person whose interest is voidable on the sale and is not entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170 (3).

So according to the majority of the recent rulings we find that though by the Full Bench decision in the case of Dayamoyee v. Ananda Mohan, the position of the part purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding has been much altered, still he is not allowed to deposit under sec. 170 (3).

Now, there remains the mortgagee. Mortgage is an incumbrance as defined in sec. 161 (16 C. L. J. 156). So we thought and from the remarks of their Lordships in Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh, 40 I. C. 257, we understood that the mortgagee could deposit under sec. 170 (3).

But in Rudha Benode Mandal v. Nitai Chand Sant, 38 C. L. J. 147, Panton, J., following the Patna cases as reported in 38 I. C. 337 and 40 I. C. 257, and the recent Calcutta case reported in 26 C. W. N. 170 (notes) held that the mortgagee is not entitled to deposit under sec. 170 (3).

During the discussion in the Council as already referred, both an unrecognised transferee and a mortgagee were named as persons entitled to make a deposit before sale and the intention of the legislature, as we understand, of course with all respect to their Lordships, was to allow them to do so.

Will any of your numerous readers kindly enlighten us as to who are now the persons whose interests in the holding are voidable on the sale, as contemplated by sec. 170 (3)?

Yours truly,
SRIS CHANDRA DHAR.
RAMESH CH. PATRANAVIS.

If Judges may extra-judicially serve on Executive Commissions.

We noticed in our last issue the unwillingness of the Hon'ble Judges of the Calcutta High Court to act in any Commission that may be appointed by the Executive Government for advising, investigating or determining in any extra-judicial capacity the guilt or innocence of any person who may be charged with any conspiracy against the State or with any other State or other offences. That the Hon'ble Judges have in this respect acted according to the best traditions of the Bench will appear from the note that we reproduce below from the columns of the last issue of the Law Times :—

"The pronouncement of Mr. Justice Avory, at the Liverpool Assizes, is in consonance with the best and highest traditions of the Bench, and an echo, albeit unconscious, of Lord Brougham's description of the ideal judicial power, 'pure and unsullied, calmly exercised, amidst the uproar of contending parties, by men removed above all contamination of faction, all participation in either its fury or its delusions.' 'I am tempted,' said Mr. Justice Avory, 'to make some observations upon the necessity of maintaining the reputation, which this country has for so long enjoyed, for both firm and impartial administration of justice, but, lest it should be supposed that I am even indirectly taking part in the election campaign, I resist the temptation.' These words reflect the sentiments of Mr. Gladstone in reference to participation, however indirect, by judges in matters of party warfare. Mr. Gladstone eulogised the abstention of judges from political affairs, not on the ground that their impartiality would be thereby affected, but that it might seem to be affected. Speaking in the House of Commons on the 5th May 1887, Mr. Gladstone opposed the suggestion of an investigation by a commission of judges of charges made against members of the late Irish National Party. 'I believe, myself,' said Mr. Gladstone,

'that all the judges now on the Bench might be trusted [as members of such a commission]. But there is one judge on the Bench now [the late Mr. Justice Fitzjames Stephen] who came down from the Bench to take a part, with regard to the great Irish question, more violent than has been taken by any layman I can remember. And if one of these gentlemen [members from Ireland] sitting below the gangway says it is excusable in him to feel some mistrust in such a case, though I should not feel such mistrust myself, yet I must say I understand that mistrust.' Lord Esher, when, as Master of the Rolls, he replied, at the Guildhall Banquet on the 9th November 1892, to the toast of 'The Judges,' laid down the golden rule by whose observance judges cannot fail to secure public confidence. Referring to the fierce attacks to which Lord Justice Mathew had been subjected as chairman of the Evicted Tenants (Ireland) Commission, Lord Esher said: 'The education and training of the judges made them impartial and determined to do right in every question which came before them. This, indeed, was so well known and recognised that when the judges of England acted within the scope of their ordinary duties nobody ever attempted even to suggest that they were not impartial. At the present time they knew that one of the judges had been asked to go beyond the scope of his ordinary duty; and he, for one, was surprised and sorry that the judge in question had consented to do so. The result was inevitable. That judge had been fiercely accused of partiality and of a want of desire to do justice.'"

If Counsel may refuse a brief of an accused person.

The same issue of the Law Times has also a very interesting note on the duty of Counsel to defend an accused person, no matter how grave may be the offence with which he is charged and quite irrespective of Counsel's personal opinion with regard to the case or the guilt or innocence of the person accused. It is said that Sir Mathew Hale used at one time to decline briefs on the latter ground; but in some cases which he considered worthless in the course of the trial, he found them well-founded and he modified his views thereafter. This fact also supports the view we have always maintained that the fact that the cause papers disclose a prima facie case is no sure index of a person's guilt.

His guilt or innocence can only be determined by a judicial trial and not otherwise. It is not for a judge or even a Counsel to prejudge the guilt or innocence of an accused person and the duty of the Counsel is to present the case of the accused person to the jury or the judge from instructions and the evidence disclosed and it is for the latter to come to their findings in accordance with the law and the legal evidence.

Our contemporary says with regard to the duty of the Counsel:—

"In this country the attitude of counsel is strictly impersonal. They scrupulously abstain from giving any personal opinion on the matter in controversy, and are not identified in any degree with the merits or the demerits of their clients or their clients' claims. The impersonal attitude of counsel in these countries may be illustrated by the method of poignancy of contrast. The question has been asked, How could Cicero even think of appearing in defence of Catiline? If the profession of an advocate in ancient Rome had been the same as in England, there would be no difficulty in the matter, for the modern advocate in England does not concern himself with the guilt or innocence or moral character of his client. His duty is merely to deal with the legal evidence, and to show, if possible, that it fails to bring home the charge to the accused. And, except in some rare cases, he is, by the very fact of his profession, understood to be under an implied obligation to undertake the defence of the accused, if his assistance is required. Thus, in 1817, Sir Charles Wetherell, the most pronounced and uncompromising Tory of his time, who actually resigned the Attorney-Generalship in the Wellington-Peel Government in consequence of its avowal of a religious disabilities removal policy, defended Watson on a charge of high treason, and secured his acquittal. So, too, at the Irish Bar, Mr. (Chief Justice) Whiteside, whose Toryism was as uncompromising as the Toryism of Sir Charles Wetherell, whom Mr. Whiteside greatly admired, defended Mr. O'Connell in 1844 in the Irish State Trials, and defended Mr. William Smith O'Brien in 1848 on his trial for high treason. These cases supply illustrations of the absolute aloofness, in these countries, of counsel from his client or his client's cause, and the necessity of the preservation of the etiquette of the Bar which precludes counsel, in their capacity of advocates, from the expression of personal opinion on the merits or demerits of a case. 'There have been,' writes Mr. Lecky, 'and perhaps still are, instances of lawyers [in these countries] endeavouring to limit their practice to cases which they believed to be just. Sir Mathew Hale is a conspicuous example, but he acknowledged that he considerably relaxed his rule on this subject, having found, in two instances, that cases which at first blush seemed very worthless, were, in truth, well founded. As a general rule English lawyers make no discrimination on this ground in accepting briefs unless the injustice is very flagrant, nor will they, except in very extreme cases, do their client the great injury of throwing up a brief which they have once accepted. They contend that, by acting in this way, the administration of justice in the long run is best served, and in this fact they find its justification.'"

Strict observance of procedural law.

Many things are said to come within the scope of sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which may be said to be the "curing" section, but this section might altogether have been omitted from the Code and certainly it is not a provision of law which is to be invoked on any and every occasion as a shield against irregularities perpetrated by the subordinate Criminal Courts. The only way to secure the proper observance of the law by the subordinate Courts is for the High Court to interfere whenever any departure from the established procedure comes to its notice. Magistrates ought to bear in mind that they are not at liberty to choose any procedure which they may find convenient. They are to follow the Code of Criminal Procedure which has been enacted to regulate the proceedings in Criminal Courts. His Lordship the Chief Justice in concurrence with Mr. Justice Chotzner distinctly said so in his judgment in the case of Suresh Chandra Gupta v. Abdul Jabbar, reported at page 127, where he had occasion to set aside an order of compensation made under sec. 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in disregard of the change effected in the section by the recent amendment. We hope the observations of the learned Chief Justice will not be overlooked, but the Magistrates in the Mofussil will realize their responsibility in administering the law according to the letter of the statute which does not seem to be always adequately appreciated.

In this connection we may refer to Lachmi Sing v. King-Emperor, (1924) Pat. 181, which is a decision in which sec. 537 of the Code was resorted to, to support a conviction under sec. 182, I. P. C., which was arrived at without any written complaint by the public servant concerned, in this case, a Writer Head Constable. Under sec. 195 as now amended, the condition precedent to the institution of a prosecution under secs. 172 to 188, I. P. C., is that the public servant concerned should make a complaint in writing on which the proper Magistrate will take cognizance. Sec. 200 of the Code has also been amended so as to obviate the necessity of examining the complainant on oath in such cases. This was certainly in view of the inconvenience which a public servant may be put to, if in the midst of his duties he has to appear before a Magistrate for examination on his complaint. Nothing can be more clear than that a written complaint is absolutely necessary in the cases referred to as being the very basis of the proceedings. We regret we cannot endorse the view taken by Kulwant Sahay, J., that the absence of a complaint in writing at the most would only amount to an error, omission or irregularity as contemplated by sec. 537 of the Code. This very section was also pleaded in justification of the irregularity complained of in the Calcutta case mentioned above, but the contention elicited the observation that Magistrates are to follow the Code of Criminal Procedure and not to give it the go-by. One curious fact in connection with the Patna case is that the trying Magistrate in response to enquiries made of him said that so far as he and the Court Sub-Inspector of Barh recollected, a petition of complaint in writing was filed by the Writer Head Constable who was examined at the time of filing the complaint in writing. Any such complaint, however, was not found on the record. Under such circumstances surely the presumption arises that there was no written complaint and the accused was entitled to complain of this irregularity and question the legality of his conviction on this ground alone.

Leading cases, Nissa v. Radha, Nalini v. Fulmani, overruled by Full Bench in Dayamayi's case.

It was, unfortunately that the Full Bench in Dayamayi's case did not expressly overrule or affirm any of the decisions on either side. But considering the views taken by it regarding the nature of the occupancy right and the respective rights of the purchaser, the raiyat, and the landlord, it gave us sufficient indications of the rulings it intended to overrule. Thus, on the face of it, it cannot now be contended that the purchaser acquires nothing by his purchase, and therefore, all the cases in which that view was taken and which were based on it must be held to have been impliedly overruled. We are particularly interested in the decision in the case of Nalini v. Fulmani. It was based, as we have already seen, upon the authority of the case of Nissa v. Radha, which held that the purchaser was not a "representative of the judgment-debtor (the transferor) under sec. 244, nor the owner of immoveable property" under sec. 311, C. P. C., 1882, inasmuch as he had acquired no interest in the holding by virtue of his purchase, and that therefore he could not apply under those sections for setting aside a sale held in execution of rent decree. The decision in the case of Nalini v. Fulmani was based principally on that view of the purchaser's right, which was taken in the case of Nissa v. Radha, that he by his purchase acquired no interest in the holding. The Full Bench, however, in Dayamayi's case held the contrary view, namely, that he acquired title to the property and was therefore entitled to make the applications. It thus, by implication, overruled the decision in the case of Nissa v. Radha, and also the decision in the case of Nalini v. Fulmani, to the extent to which it was based on it. The case of Prosunno v. Bama only followed the decision in the case of Nissa v. Radha and must also be held to have been overruled along with this. [See Rampini's Bengal Tenancy Act, 6th Ed. by D. Chatterjee, J., 132; also 20 C. L. J. 52 footnote.]

(2) Because he has no interest which is valid against landlord.

Hence, according to some decided cases, the interest to be voidable on the sale must be such interest as is valid against the landlord.

As held in Nalini v. Fulmani, 16 C. W. N. 421: s. c. 15 C. L. J. 388.

Thus, in Nalini v. Fulmani, 16 C. W. N. 421: s. c. 15 C. L. J. 388 (1912) which, though decided before the Full Bench decision in Dayamayi's case, is still regarded by Stephen, J., of the Calcutta High Court in the course of his judgment observed:— "In Hari v. Uday, 8 C. L. J. 261 (1908), it was held that the sale was not void but merely voidable by the landlord, a rule that has been frequently followed by this Court in holding that where the landlord is not a party to a proceeding arising out of the transfer, the question of transferability does not arise. I doubt, however, whether the distinction between void and voidable contracts has not been pushed too far in the case in question. The landlord's rights were not directly concerned in the case, and, on the facts before it, in order to support the conclusion arrived at, the Court need not have decided more than that the contract was void only. If the landlord recognises a transfer, it is probably open to him to recognise it upon the footing that it is or is not the subject of an occupancy right. If the 'interest' in sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, is read as 'interest against the landlord,' a sense which would bring the section into line with secs. 214 and 311 of the old Civil Procedure Code, this would put an end to the distinction between void and voidable contracts as far as the present case is concerned. . . . the possibility of the reading inclines us to follow the two decisions we have followed." (Nissa v. Radha, 11 C. W. N. 312, Prosunno v. Bama, 13 C. W. N. 602) Hence, it was held in that case that the transferee by sale is not entitled to come under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. It should be noted that the decision in that case was not based on the ground that the purchaser did not possess any incumbrance or other voidable interest in the holding, with which we are now primarily concerned. On the other hand, it is stated that each of the secs. 244 and 311, C. P. C., 1882, and sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, contemplates an interest of the same nature, namely, one which is valid against the landlord, and that even if the purchaser acquires any interest in the holding, that interest is not valid against the landlord.

Correspondence

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
Sir,

With great deference to the learned Judges, I should be sorry to point out that the decision in the case of Emperor v. Nabab Ali Sarkar, reported in L. L. R. 51 Cal. 236, raises some difficulty with reference to the particular facts of the case. The important point of law made out in the judgment is that the omission to read over the deposition to the witness in accordance with Or. 18, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, renders the same inadmissible in evidence against him on his subsequent trial for forgery. So far as this principle of law is concerned, there can be no dispute as it is supported by an overwhelming weight of authority. But the question is whether the provision of Or. 18, r. 5 has any application to the case. The facts alleged are that the accused was sought to be connected with the offence of forgery with which he had been charged by proving against him the statement which was made by him in his deposition before the Munsif in the rent suit. But my contention is that, having regard to the very clear language of sec. 148 (f) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, Or. 18, r. 5 has no application. Sec. 148 (f) of the Bengal Tenancy Act runs as follows:—

"The rules for recording the evidence of witnesses prescribed by sec. 189 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 shall apply whether an appeal is allowed or not." Sec. 148, Bengal Tenancy Act, lays down the procedure in rent suits, and the section begins thus: "The following rules shall apply to suits for recovery of rent." Now sec. 189 of the old Civil Procedure Code corresponds to Or. 18, r. 13 of the Code of 1908, and provides that in cases in which an appeal is not allowed the judge shall make a memorandum of the substance of what the witness deposes. So it is clear that Or. 18, r. 5 which lays down that the deposition of the witness shall be read over when completed in cases on which an appeal is allowed is excluded by the operation of sec. 148 (f) of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the present suit. There is nothing in the report or the judgment to show that any reference to the Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 148 (f) was made at all. Mr. Justice Suhrawardy said in the judgment at p. 242 of the report (51 Cal.) when he quoted Or. 18, r. 5: "I may mention here that in this case the value of the suit was above Rs. 50, and, therefore an appeal lay under the law." It is obvious from the passage quoted that his Lordship was thinking of sec. 153 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but it is curious that his Lordship did not direct his attention to sec. 148 (f) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. So, I respectfully submit that in this particular case, if it is made a question of compliance with certain provisions of "law, the case should have been looked at from this point of view whether a conviction of a person can be based on a statement made by him in accordance with the provision of sec. 148 (f) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides summary way of recording evidence and does not require it to be read over.

Yours, etc.,
LAKSHMI KANTA SEN GUPTA, M.A., B.L.

The late Sir Subramania Aiyar.

We deeply regret to record the death of Sir Subramania Aiyar. He was a distinguished Judge of the Madras High Court and was a worthy successor of Sir Muthuswami Aiyar and their lives and careers were exemplary in many ways. In many respects these eminent Judges may be said to have possessed an intellectual and moral kinship with Sir Gurudas Banerjee, who too like them was a poor Brahmin boy who from the qualities of their heart and mind had risen to eminence and commanded universal respect. Full of years and full of honours Sir Subramania has passed away at the age of 82, leaving behind him a name which will always be remembered with reverence and high regard. His life was an example to all and by those who knew him he was admired no less for moral eminence than for his strength of character and keenness of intellect. He was a sturdy champion of popular rights who never cared for favour or disfavour in following the dictates of his conscience. He was one of the little group who in 1884 formed the committee out of which grew the Indian National Congress. At its first session he took a leading part and was called upon to second a resolution advocating the reform and expansion of the Legislative Councils, local and supreme. The memorable speech that he made on this occasion was characteristic of the man and though the Madras Government paid him a high compliment by nominating him to a seat on the Legislative Council, he did not hesitate to say that the non-official members found themselves in the wrong place and under the constitution of the Councils they could not be of any use to the country.

He was the first Indian to be appointed

Vice-Chancellor of the Madras University and the second Indian Judge of the Madras High Court, the first being Sir T. Muthuswami Aiyar. Possessing a high sense of duty, ever anxious to do justice, highly cultured, always patient and courteous, Sir Subramania made an ideal Judge. He was never enamoured of the letter of the law and his aim as a Judge was always to place equity before the technicalities of the law. The judgments he delivered in cases where the rights of Hindu women were affected boldly testify to this. His judgment in the case reported in I. L. R. 21 Mad. is a clear analysis of the position of women in respect of inheritance. It is abundantly clear that he was guided more by the spirit of the rule laid down by the text of the Smiriti writers than by the letter of it. The decision in I. L. R. 28 Mad. is a more important step towards the proper safe-guarding of the interest of women in holding and enjoying property.

In 1895 he was raised to the Bench and on several occasions he officiated as Chief Justice of the Madras High Court and after nearly twelve years of strenuous work he retired and during the remainder of his life up till a few years prior to his death he took an active interest in every important movement for the spiritual, moral, social and political emancipation of the country. He acted as the Chairman of the Reception Committee of the Madras Session of the Congress over which the late Mr. Bhupendra Nath Bose presided in 1914. When the Great War was nearing its end and every country that had taken part in securing a triumph of the moral over the physical force longed for the recognition of the principle of justice and fair-play for all, Sir Subramania impelled by his deep love of his motherland appealed to the civilised world for justice for India. Those who took technical objection to his letter to President Wilson could not help admiring his honesty, courage and deep patriotism. Then again when Mrs. Besant was interned, he felt the injustice of it so deeply that he gave up knighthood and all honours that had been conferred on him. The moral and spiritual side of his great personality commanded no less admiration than his wordly career. Though much maturer in years and occupying the high position as a Judge, he accorded his whole-hearted support to the religious, social and humanitarian mission of young Vivekananda and it was through Sir Subramania's support that it met with an enthusiastic reception and found a permanent home in Madras at its very infancy. He was also a warm supporter of Mrs. Besant and of the theosophical movement. He like Sir Muthuswami, Sir Gurudas, Ranade, Trimbak Telang, has left behind him ideals of character and duty which present and future generations will do well to emulate.

Hirer, if liable to pay extra hire to carrier when the latter detains vessel to enforce lien.

Two courses are, generally, open to a common carrier, who has earned his freight, but whose freight is not paid.

(1) He may either exercise his lien retaining the goods till the freight is paid; (2) he may deliver the goods trusting to his action for the recovery of the agreed or proper sum (as the case may be) for the carriage.

If he adopts the first course it is his "duty to deal with it in a reasonable manner, and to keep it in a reasonable place; and that this duty would generally impose upon him the obligation of keeping it at the place of delivery for a reasonable time, if he had a convenient place of deposit there"—Per Willes, J., in Crouch v. Great Western Railway Co., (1858) 27 L. J. (Ex.) 345. Again in Somes v. British Empire Shipping Co., (1860) 8 H. L. Cas. 338, it was laid down that "a person who has a lien upon a chattel for a debt, cannot, if he keeps it to enforce payment, add to the amount for which the lien exists, a charge for keeping the chattel till the debt is paid."

The joint effect of these two cases seems to be that if a common carrier keeps the goods on his boat hired for so much a day, in exercise of his lien, he cannot charge for the days his boat is so detained. Firstly, because it cannot be said to be reasonable, viz., what a prudent man would do under the circumstances, to detain the boat when he as well could find a convenient place for warehousing the goods, and secondly, because he has retained the goods for his own benefit, viz., in exercise of his lien.

In the House of Lords' case above cited, the particulars of estimate submitted for the repair of a ship, contained an item as follows:—

"The cost of using graving dock for the job will be from 120 to 150 guineas"—and the ship having not been taken delivery of in time, dock hire at £21 a day was demanded for the number of extra days the ship was in the dock. Held, by Lord Wensleydale, that from that statement no agreement was made out to pay the cost of the hire of the graving dock. It might be contended on this observation of his Lordship that the case was decided on the footing that there was no agreement to pay extra dock hire. Consequently in case of a boat hired for so much a day, the period during which the boat is detained in exercise of the lien, might be put to the account of the defaulter as there is at least an implied agreement to that effect, the boat being hired for a certain sum per day. But that does not seem to be the proper reading of the case. The learned Lord expressed his concurrence in the judgment of Lord Cranworth in the case where the true rationale of the decision was laid down that the ship having been detained for the benefit of the persons exercising the lien "in order the better to enforce the payment of their demand" and not for the benefit of the other party, no dock charges could be realised apart from the consolidated charge made in the estimate.

Where the carrier retains the goods for his own benefit, for "the better to enforce his demand"—he is not entitled to excess charges on the ground of his boat being detained owing to the non-payment of freight. He could have delivered the goods and sue for his charges: if he has not chosen that course but has adopted the other he will take the benefit arising out of it along with its incidental drawback.

Pleas in bar to indictment for larceny.

It has been said that a case under sec. 211, Indian Penal Code, always bristles with points of law: so does one under sec. 379, Indian Penal Code. The necessary ingredients of the offence of theft are not infrequently overlooked. To sustain a conviction of theft it is necessary to prove a dishonest intention to take property out of the possession of another person. Consequently where property is removed in the assertion of a bond fide claim of right, the removal does not constitute theft. In Harnam Sing v. The Crown, 5 Lahore 56, the accused was convicted of theft and sentenced to undergo one year's rigorous imprisonment for having removed several bags of type from the press without the consent and permission of his employees. The removal of the articles was not denied by the accused but it was pleaded that the things belonged to him and he removed them because his employers failed to carry out their part of the contract which was that they would either take him as a partner in their business or purchase those materials from him for their press. It appeared that the things were removed secretly and were despatched by railway as locks and not as type but the High Court (Moti Sagar, J.) held that this fact was not sufficient to indicate that the accused had any dishonest intention.

The principle applicable in circumstances like these is well settled and is stated in works of high authority. Sir Mathew Hale in his Pleas of the Crown observes in his quaint style: "It is the mind that makes the taking of another's goods to be a felony or a bare trespass only, but because the intention and mind are secret, the intention must be judged by the circumstances of the fact. If A thinking he hath a title to the horse of B seizeth it as his own or supposing that B holds of him distrains the horse of B without cause, this regularly makes it no felony but a trespass because there is a pretence of title; but yet this may be but a trick to colour a felony, and the ordinary discovery of a felonious intent is, if the party doth it secretly or being charged with the goods denies it." To the same effect is Sir Edward Hyde East in his Pleas of the Crown: "In any case if there be any fair pretence of property or right in the prisoner or if it be brought into doubt at all the Courts will direct an acquittal; for it is not fit that such disputes should be settled in a manner to bring men's lives into jeopardy."

principle and Rex v. Hall, 3 C. & P. 409, Reg v. Wade, 11 Cox. 549, Reg v. Suppard, 4 F. & F. 51, may be cited as the leading cases on the subject. The same principle has been recognised and applied in a long line of cases in Indian Courts which show that a conviction for theft cannot be sustained if there is a bond fide assertion of a claim of right, but a mere assertion of a claim does not oust the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court; whether the claim is honest must be decided by the Court from all the circumstances of the case and it should not convict unless it is in a position to say that the claim is a mere pretence. Courts very often shirk the responsibility of coming to a decision on this point wrongly invoking the principle that civil disputes should not be tried in Criminal Courts, but they forget that this very wholesome provision of law is the strongest reason why a person indicted for larceny should not be convicted when he sets up a bond fide claim of right in defence.

The claim of right must be an honest one though it may be unfounded in law or in fact. If the claim is not made in good faith but is a mere colourable pretence to obtain or to keep possession, it avails not as a defence. The definition of theft in the Indian Penal Code is very concise and comprehensive and leaves no room for doubt as to what sort of taking comes within the mischief of sec. 378. In England prior to the passing of the Larceny Act of 1916 there were cases which went to establish that it is not necessary that the taking should be lucri causa if it is fraudulent and with intent wholly to deprive the owner of the property. R. v. Morfit, R. & R. 307, is a somewhat curious case. The prisoners, servants in husbandry, opened the granary of their master by means of a false key and took thereout two bushels of beans to give to their master's horses in addition to the quantity usually allowed. This was held to be larceny by a majority of the judges, but it was considered by some of the judges that the additional quantity of beans would diminish the work of the men who had to look after the horses and therefore the lucri causa to give themselves ease was an ingredient in the offence. The law has been altered by 26 and 27 Vict., c. 103 (Misappropriation by Servants Act, 1863), sec. 1 of which provides that if any servant shall contrary to the orders of his master take from his possession any corn,

Judicial decisions have given effect to this pulse, roots or other food for the purpose of giving the same or of having the same given to any horse or other animal belonging to or in possession of his master the servant so offending shall not by reason thereof be deemed guilty of or be proceeded against for felony but shall, on conviction of such offence before two Justices of the Peace, be either imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months or be sentenced to pay a fine, provided if the Justices shall be of opinion that the same is too trifling they shall have power to dismiss the charge without proceeding to a conviction.

But the case should be considered in the light of the decision of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Dayamayi v. Ananda, 18 C. W. N. 971: s. c. 20 C. L. J. 52; L. R. 42 Cal. 172 regarding the right of the landlord as against the transferee. It has been laid down that "where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding." Hence, Chamier, C. J., of the Patna High Court points out:—"It appears to me with reference to the decision of the Full Bench (in Dayamayi v. Ananda) that an unrecognised transferee of an entire holding, who has not been in any way recognised by the landlord, acquires no interest in the holding as against the landlord. . . . such a transferee, therefore, does not appear to me to have an interest 'voidable on the sale,' for before the sale takes place he has no interest in the holding which he can enforce against the landlord." [Rameswar v. Raghunandan, 1 P. L. J. 403.] Similarly, it has been stated by the Calcutta High Court in one of the recent cases:—"A transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding, not recognised by the landlord, derives no interest by the transfer as against the landlord, and his interest is not, therefore, voidable on the sale." [Mahammad v. Satyesh, 26 C. W. N. clxx.] And in both the cases, their Lordships relied as an authority upon the case of Nalini v. Fulmani, 15 C. L. J. 388: s. c. 16 C. W. N. 421, decided by the Calcutta High Court. In another case which is often cited in support of the same view, Mahanti v. Harkissen, 19 C. W. N. clxxvi (1914) and which was decided after the Full Bench decision in Dayamayi's case, the question whether the interest of the transferee was valid against the landlord, and what effect that had on the decision of the point we are discussing were not at all decided, but the case was remanded for the trial of the issue as to the transferability of the holding.

entire holding, so whole purchaser's interest not void but voidable by him, and he has the right to deposit.*

But it is quite clear from the Full Bench decision that even where the entire holding is sold, the sale is not void, as we have already seen, but is valid as between the transferor-raiyat and the transferee. And as between the two and the landlord, though the transferee may not acquire any interest in the holding which is valid against the landlord entitling him to retain possession thereof as against him, as the transfer may be validated by his consent previously taken or assent subsequently obtained, it is not void but is voidable by him. There is therefore no reason why he should be deprived of the right.

Part-purchaser entitled to possession against landlord has right to deposit.

But though the Full Bench in Dayamayi's case has decided that the landlord can re-enter at any moment as against the transferee of the whole in respect of a part, he can only re-enter if the transfer effects a surrender, or abandonment, of the holding, or a repudiation of the tenancy. And if, as generally happens, in the case of a transferee of a part, there is no abandonment, etc., by the recorded tenant, the landlord's right of re-entry does not arise. [See Mahadeo v. Langat, 2 P. L. J. 457 F. B. per Mullik, J.]. "And in such a case, the purchaser is entitled to possession even as against the landlord, inasmuch as the tenancy is not determined but subsists and interposes a barrier between him and the landlord. [See Purna v. Chandra, 23 C. L. J. 304 F. B.]. Hence, it has been held in the case of Sahadeo v. Kuldip, 18 C. W. N. ccxix (1914), following the decision of the Full Bench in Dayamayji's case, that as in the case of the sale of a part of the holding, the landlord is not ordinarily entitled to enter on the portion sold, it confers on the purchaser an interest therein sufficient to entitle him to apply under sec. 170, Bengal Tenancy Act. [See also Bhagraj v. Mathur, 27 I. C. 424.]

Position of mortgagee of whole or part same as that of part-purchaser whether with or without possession.

The same rule applies to the case of a mortgagee, whether with or without possession. For the Full Bench in Dayamayji's case has placed the mortgagee on the same footing as a part-purchaser of the holding with regard to the landlord's right of re-entry on transfer. There it has been laid down that "where the transfer is of a part only or not by way of sale" (which includes the case of a mortgage) "the landlord is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding," unless there is abandonment or relinquishment of the holding, or a repudiation of the tenancy, by the raiyat. The execution of the mortgage does not imply a severance of the tenant with the holding, for it is on the assumption that the tenancy continues that the mortgagee can have any subsisting interest in the land. Consequently, even where the raiyat executes a usufructuary mortgage and places the mortgagee in possession of the holding, there is neither abandonment nor relinquishment of the holding nor repudiation of the tenancy to entitle the landlord to re-enter. On principle, therefore, there is no justification in holding that a tenant who has merely executed a mortgage with or without possession has abandoned his holding. [See Mahadeo v. Panchkari, 16 C. W. N. 322. Also author's "Occupancy Right, its History and Incidents," 265-267.]

Even where the entire holding is mortgaged and the mortgagee is left in possession of the whole, and there are circumstances entitling the landlord to khas possession thereof, still until the mortgagee is ejected in the due course of law, he holds a lien over the property. The transfer on that account cannot be said to be void or illegal. It is in fact a valid one as between the raiyat and the mortgagee, but as between the two and the landlord, its validity depends on the landlord's consent. It is therefore voidable by the landlord and not void. [See Azimut v. Tamizan, 56 Ind. Cas. 490 (Pat.).] Hence, it has been held that a mortgagee has sufficient interest in the holding to entitle him to deposit the money under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. [Satish v. Tufani, 24 Ind. Cas. 9 (Cal.). See also Parosh v. Nobo, 1. L. R. 29 Cal. 1 : s. c. 5 C. W. N. 821 F. B.]

Contrary view in Radha v. Nitai, 38 C. L. J. 147 (1923), not supported by Authority.

In spite of all this it has recently been held by Panton, J., of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Radha v. Nitai, 38 C. L. J. 147 (1923) that a mortgagee is not entitled to make the deposit under that section. His Lordship relied upon the decision in the case of Mahammad v. Satyesh, 26 C. W. N. clxx (1922), as "the latest decision of this Court on the point in which it was held that the transferee was not entitled under sec. 170 (3) to make the deposit," which should be followed. But with all respect to his Lordship it may be permissible to point out that that was a case of a sale (probably of an entire holding) and not that of a mortgage and that the distinction between the right of the purchaser of the whole and that of the part of a holding or a mortgagee thereof as against the landlord is, as we have already pointed out, a fundamental distinction which has been recognised by the Full Bench in Dayamayji's case, which has held contrary to the decision in the case of Nalini v. Fulmani, to which also his Lordship has referred, that the latter has an enforceable right as against the landlord. The principle applicable to a purchaser of an entire holding cannot, therefore, be applied to a mortgagee. The two Patna cases cited by his Lordship also deal with the case of the purchaser, the one Rameswar v. Raghuqandan, 1 P. L. J. 403, with that of a whole, the other Mahadeo v. Langat, 2 P. L. J. 457 F. B., with that of a part of a holding. And on the very ground on which they have been based, which, as we have already stated, was not approved by the Calcutta High Court, and also on the ground that the mortgagee has a valid interest, though it is voidable by the landlord, a subsequent ruling of the Patna High Court has held that even a usufructuary mortgagee has the right to deposit. Azimut v. Tamzan, 56 I. C. 490. We shall have occasion to discuss it further later on.

But it seems to us that the question of the validity of the purchaser's right as against the landlord before the sale in execution of the rent-decree has no bearing on the present question, which implies a rent-sale as a result of which the interest in the holding is liable to be avoided. According to the Full Bench decision in Dayamayi's case—"Where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding." It may be that the landlord is entitled, before suing the recorded raiyat for arrears of rent, to eject the transferee from the holding. The interest of the transferee, therefore, may properly be described as one which is voidable before and independently of the rent-sale. But that is no reason why it should also be regarded as one "voidable on the sale," i.e., after the sale actually takes place and on account of it. As pointed out by D. Chatterjee and Walmsley, JJ., of the Calcutta High Court:—"The landlord can terminate the purchaser's interest at any time, and his right to do so is independent of an execution sale. We do not think, however, that on that account his interest is not one which is voidable on the sale." [Ahamadulla v. Hakaru, 18 C. W. N. cccxxi; s. c. 22 C. L. J. 106. Ahamadulla v. Prayag, 20 C. W. N. 39 (1914).] That is a case of a purchaser of an entire holding but the same reasoning applies with equal force to the case of a purchaser of a part of the holding. Thus, the right of a transferee by sale, particularly of a part of a non-transferable occupancy holding to avoid the sale before it takes place, does not depend upon the validity of his interest against the landlord. And though the transfer is not binding upon the landlord, it is not a bar to the transferee's paying in the money under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Oct. 30th, 1914.—Judgment was delivered by Sir JOHN EDGE in Jai Narain v. Ujagar Lal and Prag Narain v. Ujagar Lal, an appeal from Allahabad heard on July 22nd and 24th last. These were two consolidated appeals, one of which was dismissed and in the other the decree of the High Court was modified.

In the Council Chamber the hearing was concluded of the appeal, Mt. Maina Bibi v. Vakil Ahmad, and judgment was reserved.

The hearing was commenced of Sasi Sekharswar Roy v. Lalit Mohan (Bengal). Under an award certain lands were divided between the Plaintiff and Defendant. Later the award was filed and became a decree. The Plaintiff is now suing for possession of certain of the lands, the subject-matter of the award and is met with the defence that no suit lies and that his only remedy was an application under sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Dubé for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent.

Oct. 30th and 31st.—In the Board Room the hearing was commenced of Debi Rai v. Pahlad Das (Allahabad). The dispute relates to the ownership of a house and whether an alienation was rightly made by a member of the joint family.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellants.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Respondents.

Oct. 31st.—In the Council Chamber the hearing of Sasi Sekharswar Roy v. Lalit Mohan Mitra (Bengal) was concluded and judgment was delivered by LORD DUNEDIN dismissing the appeal.

The hearing was commenced of Seth Motilal Hirabhai v. Bai Mani (Bombay).

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Parikh for the Respondent.

The Plaintiff's predecessor mortgaged certain "A" shares and their accretions or sub-shares to the Defendants. Subsequently "B" shares were issued out of the Company's profits to the holders of the "A" shares and such shares were issued to the mortgagee whose name was entered in the Company's books as the holder of the "A" shares. The Plaintiff obtained a decree for redemption of both the "A" and "B" shares. The main question for decision in the appeal is whether on payment of the mortgage money the Plaintiff is entitled to recover the "B" shares as well as the "A" shares.

Special leave to appeal was refused in Nga Po Hman v. The King-Emperor (Burma).

Sir John Simon, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé appeared for the Petitioner.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Crown.

The Petitioner, a native of Burma, 20 years of age, was charged with having on 11th January last murdered one Maung Kywet. They were intimate friends. It was alleged that, while they were both drunk, the Petitioner asked Maung Kywet to accompany him in his cart to a neighbouring village, but that he refused. The Petitioner then stabbed him in the stomach with a knife. He died a few hours afterwards from the shock and hæmorrhage. The case was tried by the Court of Session with the aid of four assessors. The Petitioner asserted that Maung Kywet tripped over a log of wood while he was entering a hut and fell on his own toddy knife. The four assessors found the Petitioner "Not Guilty," but the Sessions Judge convicted him and sentenced him to death. The High Court affirmed that decision.

The Petitioner now submitted that he was "absolutely drunk" at the time; that the assault was sudden and unpremeditated and caused by a storm of passion and provocation and that the deed was not actuated by malice or malus animus, or any guilty knowledge or intention. He also urged that the evidence of the witnesses proved that he was so completely under the influence of drink as to be incapable of forming an intention of committing any offence, much less of causing the death of his friend.

In the course of the argument LORD DUNEDIN said that the prerogative of mercy still remained, and that the Petitioner might get the sentence commuted if the Viceroy thought proper.

At the close of the argument for the Petitioner their Lordships did not call upon Counsel for the Respondent.

LORD DUNEDIN said:—Their Lordships have again and again accentuated their determination that this Board is not to be treated as a Court of Criminal Appeal, and that it is only in cases where the grounds indicated in "Dillet's case" can be made out that an appeal can be entertained. This case seems to their Lordships far outside any of the grounds, which are put forward in "Dillet's case." In a criminal case, and especially where a man's life is involved, one is not entitled to use words which one would use in a civil case. If this was a civil case I should have called it an impudent attempt to try to get the judgment of this Board. In a criminal case one can understand why it should have been made; but I don't think I can say anything stronger than that one of the most eminent advocates at the Bar, whose arguments their Lordships are accustomed to admire on many occasions, has not been able to produce a case before their Lordships which seems to them to deserve even the name of stating.

Their Lordships consider that it is their duty to make it as plain as they can to those in India that it is quite useless to come to this Board and ask for leave to appeal against ordinary criminal sentences unless something can be clearly shown which will bring it within the rule in "Dillet's case."

Oct., 31st.—In the Board Room the hearing was concluded of Debi Rai v. Pahlad Das and judgment was reserved.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown appeared for the Appellant in Gutta Bhadrappa v. Kalagara Kankamma. The suit was brought by the Appellant for the amount claimed due on a joint promissory note and a decree was obtained. In the High Court that decree was reversed so far as the Respondent was concerned. The question at issue in the appeal is whether the note was executed by the Respondent, an illiterate woman, who contends that her mark was put to it without authority and a false thumb impression appeared.

The Respondent is represented by Mr. K. V. L. Nardsimham.

Nov. 3rd.—In the Council Chamber the hearing was concluded of Seth Motilal Hirabhai v. Bai Mani (Bombay). Judgment was reserved.

Nov. 3rd and 4th.—The hearing has commenced, and is still proceeding, of the appeal, Sm. Katyayani Debi v. Uday Kumar Das (Bengal).

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and A. Majid for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Respondent.

The suit was brought by the Respondent to recover rent of certain mouzahs in the Khulna District.

The defence to the suit was that the tenant had not been put in possession of all the lands included in the grant.

Nov. 3rd.—In the Board Room the hearing was concluded and judgment reserved in Gutta Bhadrappa v. Kalagara Kanakamma.

Nov. 3rd and 4th.—An appeal from Bengal, Surajmull Nagaremull v. The Triton Insurance Co., Ltd., came before the Board presided over by LORD SUMNER and the arguments were concluded. The suit was for damages for failure to perform a contract to issue policies for marine insurance. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. Stuart Bevan, K. C. and K. Brown for the Appellants.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Du Pareg for the Respondents.

Nov. 4th.—In Prabhudas v. Ganidada (Bengal).

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and W. Wallach applied for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. A question arises as to the construction of the Indian Tariff Act. The same question had arisen for decision in Madras and the High Court there had certified it as a matter of considerable public importance on which the decision of the Privy Council was desirable. The Calcutta High Court had refused leave to appeal from its decision.

Mr. F. B. Raikes for opponents said he was unable to dispute the fact that the matter was of considerable public importance. Leave was granted.

Nov. 4th.—In the Board Room the hearing was commenced of Bajinath Singh v. Mahomed Abba (Lower Burma). The question at issue is whether certain transactions were mortgages or absolute sales with contracts to resell.

Mr. Horace Douglas for the Plaintiff-Appellant.

Messrs. Stuart Bevan, K. C. and W. Jolly for the Respondent.

ADMISSIBILITY OF PLEADINGS AS PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir,

I shall be extremely obliged if you will kindly insert the following few lines in your highly esteemed journal. Public documents are enumerated in sec. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act. The list of such documents given therein is complete and exhaustive. There is nothing in the language of the section to suggest that the list is illustrative or it is capable of expansion. Now pleadings obviously do not come within the list and cannot be characterised public documents and hence they cannot be proved by means of certified copies.

Your correspondent has concluded from the decisions reported in 25 W. R. 68 and 1 A. L. J. R. 369 that a certified copy of a plaint is admitted in evidence under sec. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act apparently on the ground that being a part of the record it is a public document. If it be so, then every paper which is on the record, being a part of the record, is a public document. But the decisions cited do not lay down any such proposition.

In 25 W. R. 68, it was held that where a suit is compromised, a petition is presented in the usual way, and the Court makes an order confirming the agreement, which with the order as well as the power-of-attorney are all entered upon the record, these papers become a part of the record and are public documents.

In 1 A. L. J. R. 369, the question was whether the certified copy of the order of a Court passed upon the petition of compromise is admissible in evidence under sec. 77 of the Indian Evidence Act. Upon this Mr. Justice Aikman says at p. 370: "It is, I hold, a copy of a document forming the record of an act of a public judicial officer being the copy of an order of a Court passed as I take it in the terms of the compromise." Further Messrs. Ameer Ali and Woodroffe in their treatise on the Indian Evidence Act say at p. 515: "That class of documents which consist of plaints, written statements, affidavits and petitions filed in Court cannot be said to form such acts or records of acts as are mentioned in the section and are therefore not public documents."

Yours truly,

A. P. PANDÉY, M.Sc., LL.B.,

Vakil, High Court,
Allahabad.

Journal of Comparative Legislation.

The Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law for the last quarter of 1924, received last week, contains some very interesting articles. The number for the previous quarter contains summary of legislation of the different parts of the British Empire. The scheme of the Journal seems to be to give summary of legislation in some and special articles on the law, legislation and constitution of different countries exclusively in other issues of the Journal. Some of the articles are of special interest, such as the one on "City Manager Government in American Municipalities" by Mr. Dodds, Secretary of the National Municipal League of America. Among other articles in the same Journal, "Notes on Imperial Constitutional Law" by Prof. Berriedale Keith; "Recent Decisions of the United States Supreme Court affecting the rights of Aliens" by Prof. Garner, which contains notes of the decisions regarding the ineligibility of the Japanese and Hindus to nationalization in America, except by their children born in America; "The Colour Bar Decision in the Transvaal;" "Custom in the Punjab;" "Law Codification in China," will be found of special interest by Indian readers.

City Manager Government in American Municipalities.

The Municipal Councils in the American cities are all elected on universal suffrage. But from experience it has been found that "the spoils to the victor" system of administration led to many abuses. Chief amongst these are the distribution of patronage amongst the supporters, irregular assessments, inequitable taxation, laxity in collection, extravagance in expenditure, imperfect attention to the needs and requirements of the city and waste of time and energy of the councillors in political controversies. To remedy this the City Manager System of administration is being largely introduced in American cities. The system consists in entrusting the executive function of the Municipalities to City Managers, who are a professional class who specialize in such administration. They steer clear of political partisanship and have no concern with party politics. As the chief executive head of a Municipality the City Manager is responsible to the Municipal Council. The Council performs the function of watch and ward over his administration but does not meddle or interfere with him unnecessarily. The Council frames rules and regulations and makes money grants. It is claimed that this system of management has resulted in better budget methods, better tax and assessment methods and better collections and reduction of Municipal indebtedness. Floating debts have been wiped out and the financial position of the cities much improved and consequently their capacity for effecting improvements much increased. There are at present 321 cities in the United States under the City Manager plan. The salaries paid to the City Managers are moderate according to the American standard. A city with a population of 50,000 pays him only 10,000 dollars or Rs. 25,000 a year. It is said at the conclusion of the article that this system "has educated millions of people to the difference between the place of politics and the place of administration in Municipal Government, and has enabled the selection of the central administrative head to be based on professional fitness."

Power to Punish for contempt.

The inherent power of Courts to punish for contempt is necessary for the preservation of order and decorum, but a power like this which is intended to maintain the dignity of the Court must be exercised with caution for an abuse of this power brings into contempt the Court itself which seeks to keep its prestige unimpaired. The fact of obstruction to Courts is as old as the English Courts and so also is the endeavour to remove it. But the ways and means by which this end was sought to be accomplished varied with variations in the nature of the obstruction. Likewise the manner of removing obstruction was variously exercised by different Courts and at different periods. The problem was a familiar subject-matter of legislation by Parliament and in America it was included in the first Act of Congress dealing with the judiciary.

The Harvard Review contains a very learned article on the subject of power to regulate contempts in which the whole history of the law in America is surveyed. In the Act of Congress referred to above it was enacted "that all the said Courts of the United States shall have power to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of said Courts, all contempts of authority in any cause or hearing before the same." As pointed out in the article, the occasions for the exercise of the power thus conferred were not defined, so the door was left open for its arbitrary exercise. There was abuse and a succession of grievances against the exercise of arbitrary judicial power culminated in the proceedings of impeachment against James H. Peck, a Judge of the Federal District Court for the District of Mussoori. Judge Peck imprisoned and disbarred a lawyer for publishing a detailed criticism of an opinion while an appeal from him was pending. After the fullest consideration articles of impeachment were presented by the House of Representatives and Judge Peck was put to trial before the Senate. Peck's conduct was defended chiefly upon his good faith in following what purported to be the staunch precedents of the common law. This defence, doubtless considerably reinforced by humane considerations accentuated in this instance by the Judge's age and blindness, saved the day for the Judge. He was acquitted, but twenty-one out of forty-three Senators pronounced him guilty. Peck's case created a sensation, the whole country was roused and in 1831 Congress passed an Act limiting the power of the Courts to punish for contempt.

Fortunately instances of abuse of this inherent power of the Courts are rare in England and India as well. The modern tendency is to exercise this power less rigorously than in olden times. Referring to the older cases Lord Coleridge observed: "There are many cases in the older Digests and Abridgments on this subject, undoubtedly of a severe and stringent nature and such as would ill bear to be applied in the present day." (In the matter of Bentley Macleod, 6 Jur. 461.)

OCCUPANCY HOLDING TO

SEC. 170 (3), BEN-GAL TENANCY ACT.

Nalini v. Fulmani overruled on both grounds by Full Bench in Dayamayi's case.

It may be pointed out that on the decision in the case of Nalini v. Fulmani, no such distinction was drawn between the position of a transferee of a portion of a holding and that of an entire holding. The effect of the Full Bench decision in Dayamayi's case, therefore, was that so far as the transferee of a part of the holding is concerned, the case of Nalini v. Fulmani must be taken to have been overruled, inasmuch as the landlord is not entitled to recover possession of the holding. He has therefore an interest which is valid against the landlord. And so far as the transferee of the entire holding is concerned, the authority of that case must be taken to have been considerably shaken by that decision, inasmuch as, as we have already stated, its principal and chief ground for holding that the purchaser's interest is void, namely, that he acquires no interest at all in the holding has been overruled by the Full Bench decision in Dayamayi's case, and its second ground, namely, that the purchaser even if he acquires any interest, that interest is not valid against the landlord, also can no longer be supported inasmuch as though the purchaser of the entire holding (whose right to deposit was questioned in that case) may, according to the Full Bench decision, have to give up possession thereof to the landlord, as the transfer to him may be validated by the landlord's consent, it is not void but is voidable at his instance. It may be pointed out that in none of the recent cases except that of Mahomed v. Satyesh was this ground made the basis of the decision.

(3) Because such interest is not valid but void against auction-purchaser.

It is next contended that though the purchaser may have an interest in the holding which is sought to be sold in execution of a rent-decree, that interest would pass by the sale in execution thereof to the auction-purchaser. Hence, it is not such an interest as should be considered as "voidable on the sale." In other words, the expression "voidable on the sale" is intended to mean "voidable at the instance of the auction-purchaser at the rent-sale." And the question is whether the interest of the transferee is merely void or voidable at his instance. It has been stated by Chamier, C. J., of the Patna High Court in the case already referred to:—"When a landlord brings to sale an occupancy holding in execution of a decree for rent obtained against the occupancy tenant, the purchaser is entitled to disregard the transferee of the holding" (i.e., the whole holding). [See Rameswar v. Raghunandan, 1 P. L. J. 403.] This has been more clearly put by Newbould and B. Ghose, JJ., of the Calcutta High Court recently in Barada v. Fojjuddi, 28 C. W. N. cxv : s. c. 39 C. L. J. 428 (1924):—"Where the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding has not been recognised by the landlord, a decree (for rent) obtained against the tenant-transferor would be binding on the unrecognised transferee, and in execution of the decree the interest of the transferee would also pass along with the interest of the transferor, and the auction-purchaser gets the interests of both the persons, the transferor and the transferee, who were interested in the holding." A transferee of a portion of a holding may be entitled to retain possession of that portion, while the raiyat also retains possession of the remaining portion of it, but if the holding is sold in execution of a rent-decree, it, in its entirety, passes to the auction-purchaser, and the part-purchaser also must give up possession in favour of the auction-purchaser. Hence, it is contended that the interest of the purchaser of the whole or a portion of the holding is extinguished by the sale, and is, therefore, void so far as the auction-purchaser is concerned, and cannot strictly be described as "voidable on the sale."

Exactly opposite conclusion was, however, reached by other Judges of the Calcutta High Court. Thus, Mookerjee, J., of that Court observes:—"The effect of the sale in execution of the (rent decree) will be to pass to the (auction) purchaser the (holding) free of the interest of the (private purchaser). Consequently, the interest which (he) possesses is voidable on the sale." [Jugal v. Srinath, 12 C. L. J. 609 (1910); see also Radhika v. Rakhal, 13 C. W. N. 1175 : s. c. 10 C. L. J. 473 (1909), Tarak v. Harish, 17 C. W. N. 163 : s. c. 16 C. L. J. 548 (1912), Chandra v. Kalli, 1. L. R. 23 Cal. 254 (1885).] The same view was expressed by D. Chatterjee and Walmsley, JJ., of the same Court in the case already referred to [Ahmadulla v. Hakaru, 22 C. L. J. 106 : s. c. 18 C. W. N. cccxxi, Ahmadulla v. Prayag, 20 C. W. N. 39 (1914)]:—"The effect of the sale is to give the auction-purchaser the right to oust the transferee, and it has been held in Tarak v. Harish, 16 C. L. J. 548 : s. c. 17 C. W. N. 163 (1912), that that fact makes the interest of the purchaser one that is voidable on the sale." It may be pointed out that the view taken in this case was considered but not dissented from by N. Chatterjee and Greaves, JJ., in Abdur v. Promode, 22 C. L. J. 108 : s. c. 20 C. W. N. 40. The contrary view taken in the case of Jatindra v. Durga, 10 C. W. N. 439, has been dissented from in all the decisions cited above. That case, therefore, has no authority now, and does not seem to interpret the law correctly. There is thus ample authority for the view that the transferee, who is liable to be ejected by the auction-purchaser after the rent-sale, has an interest which is voidable on the sale. And although in these cases the point was specifically raised and decided, Newbould and B. Ghose, JJ., in Barada v. Fojjuddi, 28 C. W. N. cxv : s. c. 39 C. L. J. 428 (1924), were pleased to remark:—"It would, however, appear on examination of the cases cited that this point has not been considered in any of the cases in the view that has been presented before us." Even in the case of Nalini v. Fulmani, referred to by their Lordships, the decision was based not on the ground that the purchaser does not possess any incumbrance or other interest in the holding which is voidable at the instance of the auction-purchaser but on the ground that it is not valid against the landlord. If, as is now urged, the auction-purchaser has the right to oust the transferee of the whole or part of a holding, it passes to him free from any claim on the part of the transferee. The interest of the transferee, whatever it might be, is thus avoided by the sale. It cannot, therefore, be rightly regarded as void, but is voidable on the sale. After the transferee has been recognised by the landlord, a decree obtained against the transferor would not bind the transferee, and therefore the interest of the transferee would not be affected by the sale. Hence, ex hypothesi his interest would not be voidable on the sale. But where, as in this case, it is so affected, the use of the expression "void" with reference to it is meaningless.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Nov. 6th and 7th, 1923.—In the Council Chamber the hearing was concluded of Sm. Katyayani Debi v. Uday Kumar Das and their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

Nov. 6th, 7th and 10th.—The hearing was commenced of Ramdalm Singh v. Mt. Chandrama Kuer, an appeal from Patna. The question at issue relates to the estate of Brij Nandan Singh. The suit was brought by the reversioners of the deceased for a declaration that the 2nd Respondent was not his validly adopted son.

The question is purely one of fact.

At the conclusion of the arguments on November 10th, judgment was reserved.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for the Respondents.

Nov. 4th, 6th and 7th.—In the Board Room before LORD SUMNER, LORD PHILLIMORE, SIR J. EDGE and SIR L. JENKINS, the hearing was concluded of Bajmath Singh v. Md. Hajee Abba (Lower Burma). The judgment was reserved.

Nov. 10th.—The constitution of this Board was altered for the hearing of the next case, LORD CARSON taking the place of LORD PHILLIMORE and an appeal from Lahore was heard, Inlai Ram v. Ram Saran Das. The action was brought by the Plaintiff on a promissory note for Rs. 8,000 and interest at 5 per cent. per mensem. The original note was alleged to have been filed with the plaint, but later, during interlocutory proceedings, both parties agreed that the document then in Court was not the original. The Subordinate Judge allowed secondary evidence of the note and decreed the suit for the principal, and interest at a lower rate. The High Court decided that no case had been made out to justify the acceptance of secondary evidence and dismissed the suit. Judgment was reserved.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Dubé for the Appellant.

Sir W. M. Finlay, K. C. and DeMello for the Respondent.

Nov. 11th.—Before a Board composed of VISCOUNT HALDANE and LORDS DUNEDIN, ATKINSON, SUMNER and SALVESEN.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Wallach applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, in Hanmant Rao v. King-Emperor.

The Petitioner had been convicted of abetment of cheating and his sentence had been enhanced by the Judicial Commissioner. It was contended that the conviction had been obtained through the wrongful admission of evidence. In dismissing the application LORD HALDANE reiterated the opinion of LORD DUNEDIN expressed last week that the majority of these criminal applications should not be made.

Sir G. Lowndes pointed out to the Board that under the ruling of the Attorney-General, Counsel were not entitled to refuse to make the applications and suggested that the Board might make an order that such applications should only be brought on a certificate of Counsel that they were proper matters on which the decision of the Board should be sought. LORD HALDANE thanked Counsel for what he termed "a very useful suggestion."

REPORTS (See Index.)

New Year Greeting.

We wish all our readers a happy New Year and many more returns of the same. May the New Year be marked by peace, contentment, orderly progress, mutual good will and amity between all communities and supremacy of the rule of law in all spheres of life.

New Year Honours.

We are glad to note that a Knighthood has been conferred on Mr. Justice Rankin. His work on the Bench has been much appreciated by the profession and he has won the good opinion of all by his ability, courtesy, patience, quick despatch of business and desire to do justice. He has also rendered great public service as a member of the Hunter Commission and as the president of the Civil Justice Committee and it is very appropriate that he should be so honoured.

We also offer our congratulations to Sir Evan Cotton, the President of the Bengal Legislative Council for the Knighthood conferred on him. He is the son of a distinguished father and he assisted him very materially in the singular services that he rendered to India. Sir Evan practised as a member of the Calcutta Bar for many years and on his retirement to England he edited the newspaper "India" in London. He was then returned as a member of Parliament when he took great interest in Indian questions. On the death of Sir Syed Samsul Huda, he was appointed to his present office, where he has conducted the proceedings of the Council under very unenviable circumstances. The honour conferred on him is befitting his position.

Sir Hari Sing Gour, who is also the recipient of Knighthood, is well-known to the legal profession as the author of voluminous legal works both in civil and criminal law. He is also a distinguished lawyer in the Central Provinces. As a member of the Legislative Assembly and the author of the Act amending the law of Civil Marriage in India he is well-known. He is the Vice-Chancellor of the Delhi University and is the possessor of many academical distinctions and the honour of Knighthood has been conferred on him not a day too soon. We offer him our hearty congratulations.

The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill of 1925.

We have carefully perused the Criminal Law Amendment Bill of 1925 which is proposed to be introduced into the Bengal Legislative Council on the 7th instant for the extension of the life of the Ordinance of the same name from six months to five years as also the memorandum of the Bengal Government explaining its objects and reasons. We see no reason to change our opinion that like the Ordinance it is an ill-conceived, arbitrary and drastic measure. The text of the Bill makes but slight and quite immaterial changes in the provision of the Ordinance. The first portion of the Bill provides that the Local Government may direct any person arrested under its arbitrary orders passed under the provisions of the second part of the Bill to be placed on his trial, not as a matter of course but at the option of the Executive, not before a Court of law but before a Commission of its own choice composed of judges inferior in rank to High Court Judges without a jury and without any preliminary enquiry. Even the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1908, Part I, which was repealed by the Indian Legislature in 1922, provided for a preliminary judicial enquiry before a Magistrate, though of a summary character and on commitment thereafter, trial by a special tribunal of three High Court Judges. The Act of 1908 was passed into law when there was a revolutionary movement of a serious character and revolutionary crimes were quite frequent. Now that a few stray and straggling revolutionaries are said to exist amongst a peaceful and law-abiding population of 47 millions and no attempt has been made by the Government to satisfy the public that such misguided persons cannot be adequately dealt with under the ordinary law, it is an outrage on the public opinion of Bengal and beyond, to propose a legislation which is more drastic in its provision than the Act of 1908 and even the disastrous Rowlatt Act which now stand repealed. The nature of the autocratic power with which the Government of Bengal seeks to arm itself under the proposed Bill, may be judged from the fact that it seeks to invest itself with arbitrary powers of arrest, detention and even putting persons into prison without any legal or judicial process and of their own free will and unfettered discretion. Since the Government is not bound to bring these persons to a trial even before a Commission, the powers of the Bengal Government are to be more drastic than even those of a general administering martial law which was defined by the Duke of Wellington as the will of the general and which by the common consensus of jurists is designated as no law at all.

The second part of the Bill is similarly a war measure and partakes of the characteristics of martial law. One has to search in vain through the pages of English history for any such powers which were never claimed even by the much maligned Stuarts during the darkest days of their rule that ended in rebellion and revolution. For analogy one would have to seek it in the history of France, Austria or Russia of the pre-revolution days or that of the Soviet rule of the present times. It is therefore with a sense of pain and humiliation that we have to review this piece of un-British legislation in our columns. The main provision of Part II of the Bill is cl. 11, which provides that if the Government be of "opinion that there are reasonable grounds of believing" or in other words suspecting, that a person "has acted, is acting or about to act in contravention of the provisions" of the Arms Act or the Explosive Substances Act, or "has committed, is committing or about to commit" any of the scheduled offences or is suspected to be connected with any association whose objects are believed to include the commission of such offence or any person suspected to be about to interfere, by threat or violence, with the administration of justice, may not only be arrested by police or other Government officers mentioned in cl. 13, but his house searched without any warrant or legal process. Then without any trial or judicial enquiry, the Government may order (a) that he must notify his residence or change of residence to an officer named in the order; (b) report himself to the police in such manner and at such periods as directed, (c) conduct himself as directed in the order; or under (d) and (e) that he be interned or his liberty and freedom be otherwise restrained. Here we may mention that during the war when persons were interned in villages under the Defence of India Act, some internees, even when they fell ill, had to walk many miles in the early hours of morning to report themselves to the police station and walk back as in the case of default they might be visited with heavy sentences of imprisonment. Cl. 15 of the present Bill provides identical sanction for non-compliance of any of the orders of Government. These orders again are in the nature of martial law orders. May we ask, is it humane or even human to enact such a law, if it be law at all, in times of peace? But this is not all; the climax is reached when cl. 11, sub-cl. (f) provides that a person may be "committed to custody in jail" by an executive order.

Cl. 18 of the Bill contravenes a no less well-recognised principle of justice. It provides that the allegations against persons who have been deprived of their liberty by Government orders under any of the provisions of cl. 11 aforesaid shall be placed before two kucha pucca Sessions Judges, together with an answer, if any, to the allegations of the persons so punished without trial, and these members of the subordinate judiciary whose prospects in the service largely depend upon the good graces of the Government are to advise the Government whether there is a "sufficient cause" for the Government order. The Bill, no doubt, uses the word "lawful" before "sufficient," but we have advisedly omitted it because to call upon any judicial officer to pronounce any opinion on "allegations," without offering him any opportunity to test them by any judicial procedure or to the accused to offer evidence or to be represented by counsel, is contrary to all civilized notions of law and justice. We presume that such must be the reasons of the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court of Calcutta for having declined to be consulted in such matters. Every self-respecting judicial officer would be thoroughly justified in declining to express any opinion on such materials. It is the duty of a Public Prosecutor to advise the Government whether there is any case against an accused person on the assumption that the allegations in the Government brief are true, but no fair Crown Counsel would vouch for the truth of the allegations until they are tested at a trial. Thus it will be seen that the proposed Bill offend against all the fundamental principles of law, justice, rights and liberties of the subjects and of civilized or constitutional Government. No legislature would ever think of investing the Executive of any country with such arbitrary and irresponsible powers in times of peace and we have no doubts in our mind that the non-official members of the Bengal Council will throw it out. We hope that the Government will accept its verdict and will not commit the blunder of passing it by certification against the unequivocal opposition of the people of the country. The only sensible course would be to put the arrested persons on their trial before the ordinary Courts of law under the ordinary procedure and law of the land and thus diagnose and effectively deal with the disease where it is proved to exist in our admittedly sound body politic.

Judgment of the Privy Council in the Sankaritola Post Office Murder Case.

We publish in this issue the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee in the case of Barendra Kumar Ghosh generally known as the Sankaritola Post Office Murder Case. It is an authoritative pronouncement on the interpretation of sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code, which along with secs. 114 and 149 has always presented the knottiest problems to Courts of law.

The facts of the case must be fresh in the minds of the readers and are fully set out in the judgment. The charges preferred against the accused were murder under sec. 302, I. P. C. and voluntarily causing hurt under sec. 394, I. P. C., while jointly concerned in an attempted robbery. To the first charge he pleaded not guilty and to the second he pleaded guilty of robbery. The argument on behalf of the Appellant shortly put was that sec. 34 only applies to cases when several persons (acting in furtherance of a common intention) do some fatal act which one could do by himself. In other words in sec. 34 a criminal act in so far as murder is concerned means an act which takes life criminally within sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code. It does not require much ingenuity to discover that if this were the correct view there would have been no necessity for a section like sec. 34 in the Code at all. As observed by their Lordships judicial opinion on the interpretation of sec. 34 for over sixty years has been uniform. The only notable instance in which a discordant note was struck was in the judgment of Stephen, J., in the case of Imperator v. Nirmal Kanta Roy, another case of murder in the streets of Calcutta which created great sensation at the time. In this case two men obviously acting in concert both fired at a policeman one hitting and killing him and the other failing to hit him at all, and the learned Judge directed the acquittal of the latter, who was charged under secs. 302/34, I. P. C., with murder. He held that applying sec. 34 to the case the criminal act was the killing of the policeman, that only one man killed him not both, that all the prisoner did was to try to kill him and in order to make the accused liable for murder under sec. 34 it would be necessary to say that an offence and an attempt to commit it are the same act. The learned Judge was fully aware that his decision was contrary to the view of the section generally taken, namely, when several persons unite with a common purpose to effect any criminal object all who assist in the accomplishment of that object are equally guilty though some may be at a distance from the spot where the crime is being committed. The learned Judge defended his own view in a letter addressed to us and which we published at page 222 of the 18th Volume of this Journal. He was of opinion "that the old English law as to parties to the commission of an offence has proved too strong for the purifying effect of the Penal Code and that its complexity has proved so attractive to the most learned of our commentators and to our highest judicial officers that they have read a perfectly simple enactment in a highly artificial way in order to retain at least a flavour of it."

Stephen, J.'s view was followed in Emperor v. Profulla Kumar Majumdar, 21 C. W. N. 1016, but their Lordships on a consideration of the subject in all its bearing refused to accept it. They held that sec. 34 deals with the doing of separate acts, similar or diverse by several persons; if all are done in furtherance of a common intention each person is liable for the result of all.

In this elaborate judgment their Lordships also consider the scope of secs. 114 and 149, I. P. C. As to the former it is pointed out that "sec. 114 is a provision which is only brought into operation when the circumstances amounting to abetment of a particular crime have first been proved and then the presence of the accused at the commission of the crime is proved in addition." As to sec. 149 their Lordships observe that "it prohibits an assembly of five or more persons having a common object and then the doing of acts by members of it in prosecution of that object. There is a difference between object and intention for though their object is common the intention of the several members may differ and indeed may be similar only in respect that they are all unlawful while the element of participation in action which is the leading feature of sec. 34 is replaced in sec. 149 by membership of the assembly at the time of the committing of the offence."

By RADHAROMON MOOKERJEE, VAKIL, BERHAMPOR.

Case of mortgagee of whole or part with or without possession.

A mortgage of the whole or part of a holding, with or without possession, is an "incumbrance" within the meaning of sec. 161, Bengal Tenancy Act, which is liable to be "annulled" by the auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a rent decree. The mortgagee, therefore, has an interest in the holding which is voidable on the sale, and is entitled to make the deposit under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. [See Pareesh v. Nobo, I. L. R. 29 Cal. 1 F. B.: s. c. 5 C. W. N. 821; Pran v. Atul, (1917) 22 C. W. N. 662]. Where a part of the holding is mortgaged, the landlord cannot seek for ejectment of the mortgagee, who is in possession. Even where the entire holding is mortgaged and the mortgagee is left in possession of the whole, and there are circumstances entitling the landlord to khas possession thereof, still until the mortgagee is ejected in due course of law, he holds a lien over the property, which is an incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161 (a), Bengal Tenancy Act, liable to be avoided or "annulled" by the auction-purchaser at the rent-sale. The interest of the mortgagee in such a case cannot be said to be void or illegal, but is "voidable on the sale" within the meaning of sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. Hence, it has been held by the Patna High Court in Azimut v. Tamzan, 56 Ind. Cas. 490 (1919) that a usufructuary mortgagee of the holding has an incumbrance which is an "interest voidable on the sale," thereof entitling him to make the deposit under sec. 170 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. It may here be pointed out that this view only follows as a corollary from the decision of the Special Bench of that Court already cited according to which the operation of that section is confined to incumbrances. According to the Calcutta High Court, as we have already stated, the protection afforded by it is not limited to incumbrances only.

Case of Radha v. Nitai; 38 C. L. J. 147 (1923) against previous authority.

It has, however, been held by Panton, J., of the Calcutta High Court in Radha v. Nitai, 38 C. L. J. 147 (1923) that a mortgagee is not entitled to make a deposit under the section. This view, as we have seen, cannot be supported, and goes against the decisions of the Calcutta and Patna High Courts to which we have just referred, but which unfortunately were not cited before his Lordship. That a mortgage is an incumbrance liable to be avoided by the auction-purchaser at the rent execution sale admits of no doubt. The plain wording of the section itself clearly shews that the interests which it intends to protect include incumbrances. And in this view both the High Courts agreed, the only difference between the two being that while the Calcutta High Court does not confine it to incumbrances only the Patna High Court does.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Nov. 13th, 1924.—The hearing of Canadian appeals has now commenced and only one Board is to hear Indian cases. At present this is constituted as follows:—

LORD SUMNER, SIR J. EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.

Their Lordships are at present hearing arguments in an appeal from Allahabad, Jag Prasad Rai v. Musammat Singari. The main question in the case is whether the parties remained a united Hindu family or effected a re-union after an admitted separation.

The Appellant is represented by Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and A Majid.

The Respondent by Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and B. Dubé.

Nov. 13th.—Judgment was delivered by LORD DUNEDIN in Saiyid Manzur Hasan v. Saiyid Md. Zaman allowing the appeal from the High Court at Allahabad.

Owing to their Lordships' recent decision not to read in Court the reasons for their judgments, but only to give out the actual result of the appeal, it is not yet possible to state the grounds on which the High Court's decision was reversed.

In Ramdalim Singh v. Mt. Chandrama Kuer mentioned in these notes last week, LORD DUNEDIN to-day delivered oral judgment dismissing the appeal. Their Lordships were of opinion that the adoption had been proved as also the authority to adopt. They were, however, of opinion that the evidence was scanty and conflicting and ordered that neither party should get costs.

Mr. Wallach applied for special leave to appeal in a criminal matter—Gurmukh Singh v. King-Emperor. Leave was refused.

In the Board Room before LORD SUMNER, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS, Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach presented a petition for special leave to appeal in Wali Mahomed v. Mahomed Bakhsh. Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. intimated that the petition required amendment as further grounds were to be added. The Board refused an adjournment and dismissed the application.

Nov. 13th and 14th.—The hearing was continued before the same Board of Jag Prasad Rai v. Musammat Singari where the question at issue is whether the parties remained a united Hindu family or effected a re-union after an admitted separation. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and A Majid for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.

Nov. 14th.—Mr. B. Dubé applied to the Board for leave to have an appeal to the Privy Council restored. The High Court of Patna had granted a certificate under sec. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code but the Appellant had failed to raise funds for the deposit required within time. The application was opposed by Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes. Leave was refused.

Mirza Fida Rasul v. Mirza Yakub Beg was an appeal from a decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The validity of a wakf was called in question. One branch of the settlor's family had been excluded from participation in the mutwalliship and they alleged that the dedication had been engineered by undue influence exercised by other members.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellants.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Hyam for the Respondents.

Nov. 17th.—Judgment was delivered in Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Pershad and Fateh Singh v. Jagannath Bakhsh Singh heard on October 27th last.

In each case the appeal was dismissed.

Nov. 17th.—The Board to-day was composed of the following members LORDS BUCKMASTER, DUNEDIN and SUMNER and they heard an appeal from Lahore on a question of land value, Narsingh Das v. Secretary of State for India. The sole point for determination is what is the market value in terms of sec. 23 of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894 of the land belonging to the Appellant compulsorily acquired by the Punjab Government.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and A. Majid for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Wallach for the Respondent were not called upon.

Nov. 18th.—The hearing was concluded in Mirza Rasul Beg v. M. Yakub Beg. The Respondents were not called upon and the judgment of the Board was delivered by LORD SUMNER at the conclusion of the Appellant's argument. The appeal was dismissed.

LORD SUMNER, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and SIR LAWRENCE JENKIN'S commenced the hearing of Dhanraj Joharmal v. Sonabai, an appeal from the Central Provinces. The suit concerns the validity of the adoption of the Appellant. The Respondent claims to be entitled to properties at Khanapur in E. Berar if the adoption is invalid. A formal deed of adoption, was admittedly executed in May 1908 and the Respondent alleges that the adoption took place on that date. The adopted son was then an orphan and it is contended that he could not have been validly adopted. That view was taken by the Appellate Court which reversed the decision of the District Judge. The latter tribunal had held that the Appellant had been given in adoption by his mother during her life-time and that it was merely confirmed by the deed of adoption in 1908. The Appellant is represented by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and S. Hyam, the Respondent by Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and B. Dubé.

In dismissing the petition for special leave to appeal from a conviction and sentence of death in Umra v. King-Emperor, the Board define and apparently limit the application of Dillet's case (L. R. 12 A. C. 459) in regard to a review of criminal proceedings. In the present case Sir George Lowndes, K. C. in applying for special leave stated that the confession of a co-accused had been used in evidence against the applicant and contended that the improper admission of this evidence amounted to a grave injustice and a violation of the principles of natural justice within the meaning of V. Pillai v. King-Emperor (L. R. 40 I. A. 193 at p. 211).

In the course of his judgment LORD DUNEDIN says: " . . . Where the matter depends upon the particular view taken of sections of an Indian Act their Lordships could not say that to assert that upon those sections the Judges had come to a wrong conclusion is tantamount to saying that there has been substantial and grave injustice done. Even therefore if there had not been the expression of opinion " (by one of the High Court Judges) " that the other evidence was sufficient, their Lordships would not have held that the so-called miscarriage of justice in respect of a wrong interpretation of the sections . . . is such as to bring the case within the rules laid down in In re Dillet and insisted upon in subsequent cases."

In the judgment in Manzur Hassan v. Md. Zaman where there was a dispute between Sunni and Shia Mahomedans as to the right of religious processions to proceed along a certain highway in Aurangabad the Board have decided that such a right does exist and quote with approval the remarks of Turner, C. J. in Parthasarathi Ayyangar v. C. Ayyangar (I. L. R. 5 Mad. 309) and the decision in Sudram Chetti v. The Queen (I. L. R. 6 Mad. 263). With regard to the right to bring a civil suit for obstruction in holding a procession they were of opinion that the view of the Madras and Calcutta Courts was correct and that the view expressed in Satkuvalad v.

Ibrahim (I. L. R. 2 Bom. 457) that a suit only lay if the Plaintiff had suffered personal damage was incorrect.

Nov. 20th.—Judgment was delivered in Palani Ammal v. M. Moniagar (Madras). The appeal was dismissed.

In Dhanraj Joharmal v. Sonabai, the hearing was concluded and judgment reserved.

Nov. 20th and 21st.—The hearing was commenced of Ahmed Khan Najoo Khan v. Ali Ibrahim Noor before LORD SUMNER, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS. The appeal is from a decree of the Court of the Resident of Aden passed conformably to a decision of the High Court of Bombay under sec. 8 of the Aden Courts Act. The dispute relates to a trading partnership between the Plaintiff and Defendant under which the Plaintiff was to finance the Defendant who was to sell goods in Gaizan in the Hinterland. Later the partnership was determined and the Appellant claims an account of the money advanced. The Respondent contends that there has been an adjustment which, however, is challenged as being procured under duress.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and L. M. Parikh for the Appellant.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondent.

At the conclusion of the arguments the appeal was dismissed. Oral judgment being delivered by LORD SUMNER.

Nov. 21st.—Graham v. Krishna Ch. Dey (Bengal). Judgment was delivered in this appeal by LORD SUMNER. The appeal was allowed but without costs.

Ghatta Bhadrappa v. Kalagara Kankamma (Madras). Judgment was delivered by SIR JOHN EDGE. The appeal was allowed.

Kashigir v. Anand Bharti (Central Provinces). This appeal was dismissed for non-prosecution. The Respondent represented by Mr. E. B. Raikes was allowed his costs.

Nov. 21st, 24th, 26th and 27th.—The hearing was commenced of Hashmat Ali v. Mt. Nasib-ul-nissa (Punjab).

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellants.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for the Respondents.

The question in issue relates to the succession to an estate, a special custom being alleged among the Sayads of Kharkanda.

Nov. 25th.—Judgment was delivered by LORD DUNEDIN in Satya Niranjan Chakravarti v. Ram Lal. The Appellants prayed that it might be declared that the Plaintiffs are entitled to and are in possession of the underground rights in the suit mouzahs.

The Respondents were putnidars under grants from the Appellants, and had been working minerals to the Appellants' knowledge for more than 12 years. The Board held that the suit was barred under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act, and also under Art. 120 as it was a suit for a declaration. They also held that on the construction of the grant a right to work the minerals had passed to the grantees, and dismissed the appeal.

Nov. 27th.—An appeal from Madras, Arunachaliah v. L. Dreypur & Co. was dismissed. The Respondent was represented by Mr. Van Den Bergh.

Notes of Cases. CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD AND B. B. GHOSE, JJ. S. A. No. 582 of 1923. SARAT KUMARI DEBI, Defendant-Appellant v. MECHER MOLLAH, Plaintiff-Respondent. The 5th August 1924.

Ex parte decree, suit to set aside, on the ground of fraud, if lies when the fraud alleged was the falsity of the claim and giving perjured evidence—Falsity of claim, found from consideration of evidence, if constitutes such fraud.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th January 1923 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 4th Court of Zillah 24-Peranahs (Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose), dated the 19th September 1922, affirming the decree of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Barasat (Babu Kopilesh Chandra Chatterjee), dated the 12th March 1921.

The Appellant had brought a suit against the Respondent, who appeared on several days of hearing, but ultimately an ex parte decree was passed against him. He then brought the present suit for setting aside the ex parte decree on the ground of fraud. On a consideration of the evidence in the present case both the lower Courts held that the claim of the Plaintiff in the previous suit was false to his knowledge and the decree was obtained by means of perjured evidence. On these findings both the lower Courts held that the decree was obtained by fraud and set it aside. Against that decision the present appeal was preferred.

Babu Harendra Nath Mukerjee for the Appellant contended.—In the previous suit the Defendant had ample opportunity to contest the suit. As there was no contrivance by which he was prevented by the Plaintiff of that suit from placing his case before the Court, there was no fraud practised on the Court. Assuming that the Plaintiff obtained the previous decree by means of false allegations or false evidence, that is no ground for setting aside the ex parte decree in question as fraudulent.

The leading judgment on the point is the judgment of Sir Comer Petheram in I. L. R. 21 Cal. 612. The cases which followed that judgment are:—14 C. W. N. 695; 16 C. W. N. 1002; I. L. R. 41 Cal. 990; 24 C. W. N. 133. The two cases which are against me are:—I. L. R. 38 Cal. 936 and 18 C. W. N. 447. The cases in I. L. R. 41 Cal. 990 and 24 C. W. N. 133 shew that the learned Judges who decided the case in I. L. R. 38 Cal. 936 have veered round to the old principle enunciated in the leading judgment of Sir Comer Petheram in I. L. R. 21 Cal. 612. In Madras the principle has been settled by a Full Bench Ruling reported in I. L. R. 41 Mad. 743. In Allahabad the cases reported in I. L. R. 37 All. 535 and I. L. R. 38 All. 7 support the principle. The English cases deal with foreign judgments. Foreign judgments stand on a different footing.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

• The Court passed the following judgment:—

In the suit out of which this appeal arises the Plaintiff sought to set aside an ex parte decree passed in a rent suit on the ground that it had been secured by fraud. The suit was decreed and the decree was upheld by the lower Appellate Court on the finding that the landlord's claim in the suit was false and that the landlord got the ex parte decree in the said case fraudulently by adducing false and perjured evidence. It is contended on behalf of the Appellant before us, and we hold that it is a sound contention, that this suit was not maintainable and should have been dismissed. It was held by Sir Comer Petheram, Chief Justice, in Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sukiman, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 612, that a decree cannot be set aside merely on the ground that it has been secured by perjured evidence. That decision has been repeatedly followed and it is sufficient to cite the latest decision on this point where all the previous rulings have been considered. That case is Jnanendra Nath Nata v. Hari Mandal, 24 C. W. N. 133. There the principles on which a decree can be set aside have been set out, namely:—“That two propositions appear to be well-established. The first is that although it is not permitted to show that the Court was mistaken it may be shown that it was misled. The second is that the decree cannot be set aside merely on the ground that it has been procured by perjured evidence.” The findings in the present case come to no more than that the decree was obtained by perjured evidence.

We therefore decree this appeal and set aside the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and the suit will be dismissed.

The Appellant will get his costs in all Courts.

J. N. R. Appeal decreed with costs.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Application in revision by witness for getting objectionable remarks expunged from record.

Has a witness in a criminal case, whose evidence has been stigmatised by the lower Court as false a right to move the High Court in revision to have the remarks of the lower Court expunged from the record? The question is an interesting and important one. Under sec. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the High Court may in revision exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal and under sec. 423, cl. (d) the Appellate Court may make any consequential or incidental order that may be just and proper. Sec. 423 of the Code read as a whole seems to indicate that such consequential or incidental order must be one affecting the parties to the proceeding. Even if the words of cl. (d) are interpreted to have a wider meaning the question arises at whose instance does the appeal lie? Under sec. 404 no appeal lies from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court except as provided for by the Code and under sec. 410 any person convicted on a trial held by a Sessions Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge may appeal to the High Court and under sec. 411 any person convicted on a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate may appeal to the High Court if the Magistrate has sentenced him to imprisonment for a term exceeding six months or to fine exceeding two hundred rupees and under sec. 417 the Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an Original or Appellate order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court. Thus it is abundantly clear that an appeal lies only at the instance of an accused who has been convicted or the Crown which prosecuted him unsuccessfully. Now so far as revision is concerned, who is competent to invoke the assistance of the High Court? The words of sec. 439 of the Code are very wide indeed. In the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge the High Court may in its discretion exercise all the powers of an Appellate Court. The words "which otherwise comes to its knowledge" indicate that the making of an application is not even a condition precedent to the exercise of the revisional powers of the Court.

For example the High Court may interfere in a case on reading a newspaper report thereof. Such an instance did happen in the Calcutta High Court several years ago when two railway employees were prosecuted before the Joint Magistrate of Ranaghat for having trespassed into a female compartment and attempted to take liberties with a female passenger. The accused were convicted by the Magistrate but wholly inadequate sentences were passed on them. Mr. Justice Chunder Madhab Ghosh and Mr. Justice Wilkinson who were presiding over the Criminal Bench at that time sent for the records of the case on their own initiative and enhanced the sentence from one month to eighteen months. The High Court has undoubtedly powers to interfere in revision in this manner but it must be for the purpose of making an order affecting one or other of the parties to the proceeding. The only difference then between an appeal and a revision is that interference in appeal is limited to an appeal being presented to the Court whereas in the latter case the Court may exercise its jurisdiction notwithstanding that no application was made to it. But it does not follow from this that an application in revision lies at the instance of a witness or any one else.

It is ridiculous to suppose that the Legislature intended that of the witnesses examined in a case every one has a right to come up to the High Court and ask it to express an opinion as to the evidence given by him. Where a case is properly before the High Court then of course it can come to a conclusion totally different from that arrived at by the lower Court as to the veracity of a particular witness who may have given evidence either for the prosecution or for the defence. One can conceive of a case in which a Sessions Judge has gone out of his way to make aspersions against a person who is neither a party nor a witness; in such a case the person aggrieved may claim a right to move the High Court for the purpose of having the unjustifiable remarks removed from the record, be such interference in its revisional jurisdiction or in the exercise of its powers of general superintendence over all inferior Criminal Courts.

Perhaps such a case has never happened and equally rare is an application in revision by a witness who has been stigmatised by the lower Court as a perjurer. Such an instance did happen in Amarnath v. The Crown, 5 Lahore 476. The Petitioner was a Sub-Inspector of Police who in a certain case deposed before the Sessions Judge to having been present at a certain place at a certain time and heard some speeches that were made by some persons. The Sessions Judge being suspicious called for the diary of the witness which when produced showed clearly, as the Sessions Judge held, that the witness was at the particular time in question somewhere else. The Judge accordingly disbelieved the police officer holding that he had perjured himself and his testimony could not be relied on. The witness moved the High Court and Eforde, J., ordered the remarks to be expunged from the record. His Lordship says: "The learned Sessions Judge had no right whatsoever to put the roznamcha referred to in his judgment upon the record of the proceedings; such a procedure on his part is not only highly irregular but is entirely illegal." The Sessions Judge should undoubtedly have drawn the attention of the witness to the discrepancy between the evidence given in Court and the diary and we quite agree with his Lordship that it is an elementary principle of justice that no person should be condemned without being given an opportunity of being heard in his own defence. What was actually done was to compare the entries in the diary with the evidence of the witness and discard the evidence as false. This was wholly improper for the entries in the diary could not be treated as evidence unless the attention of the witness was drawn to them. One welcomes such instances of interference by the High Court for the purpose of giving relief to persons who are injured in reputation by unjustifiable observations made in judgments but for the reasons stated above it is extremely doubtful whether an application in revision such as the one in the case in question does at all lie.

American Law regulating sale of theatre tickets.

Public interest in theatres seems to be unusually great in America. Approximately two million theatre tickets are sold each year by the speculators of New York City. The tickets are obtained under regular agreements with the managers, often weeks before the opening night of a performance. The control of the best seats through such agreements is so complete that patrons can obtain at the box office nothing closer than the fifteenth or sixteenth row. The general business law of New York prohibits any person from engaging in the business of reselling theatre tickets without a license from the comptroller and restricts the price of tickets to fifty cents in advance of the price printed on the face thereof. In People v. Weller, 143 N. E. 205 a notice of which appears in Harvard Law Review, the Defendant was convicted of reselling a ticket without a license. He appealed on the ground that the statute was unconstitutional but it was held that the regulation was valid. Says the learned commentator in the Harvard Review:—"The constitutional principles governing the case are simple and familiar. If the business is clothed with a public interest the State acting under its police power may impose restrictions. The restrictions must be reasonable. . . . Is the theatre business so affected with a public interest that it is properly the subject of State regulation? The Greeks considered the support of the drama a public function. In England theatre licensing dates back to Henry VIII. And in the American States from the earliest times theatres have been subject to Government regulation. But the cases show that the theatre business cannot be pigeon-holed either as a public calling or as a so-called private business. For, on the one hand, the Courts are unanimous that in the absence of a statute, the theatre manager unlike the common carrier need not grant admission to the extent of his capacity to all properly presenting themselves. He may discriminate at his pleasure refusing admission to hostile critics, to those purchasing from street speculators or whom not. Yet on the other hand a statute abridging these powers of the manager does not deprive him of liberty or property without due process of law. It is manifest therefore that to a certain extent at least the theatre may enter the charmed circle of business clothed with a public interest. In Greater New York with its three hundred and fifty-six theatres, halls and stadiums, public interest in the theatre is unusually important. And under local conditions of recognised abuses in the control of admissions, the public concern justifying regulation would seem legitimately to extend to the intimately interwoven calling of ticket brokerage."

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Dec. 4th, 1924.—Rikhi Ram v. Murray & Co. Ltd. (Kumaon). Mr. W. Wallach applied for special leave to appeal in the above suit, to a Board composed of LORDS SUMNER, WRENBURY and CARSON. Leave was refused.

In Begu v. King-Emperor (Lahore), special leave to appeal to the Privy Council had been granted in July last.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown applied on behalf of the Respondent to expedite the hearing stating that the record had arrived in October and no steps for prosecuting his appeal had been taken by the Appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach on behalf of the Appellant submitted that the application was unnecessary, as the Appellant was prosecuting his appeal with all diligence, and was well within the four months allowed him by the order.

The Board acceded to his contention and ordered the applicant to pay the costs of the application.

Dec. 4th.—Hurnandrai Fulchand v. Pragdas Budhsen (Bombay).

Mr. S. D. Porter applied for directions as to the interpretation of the Order in Council.

Messrs. Clauson, K. C. and E. B. Raikes opposed the application which was dismissed.

Dec. 5th.—Judgment was delivered in Bainath Singh v. Vali Md. Hajet Abba (Lower Burma). The appeal was allowed.

Dec. 11th.—The following judgments were delivered:—Karimunnissa Khatun v. Md. Fazlul Karim (Bengal), appeal dismissed; Motilal Hirabai v. Bai Mani (Bombay), appeal dismissed; Narasingh Das v. Secretary of State for India (Lahore), appeal dismissed; Maina Bibi v. Vakil Ahmad (Allahabad), appeal dismissed; Sm. Katyayani Debi v. Uday Kumar Das (Bengal), appeal dismissed.

The practice of the Board now in delivering judgment is merely to state the decision arrived at. A printed proof of the judgment is later circulated to the counsel who were engaged and the proposed Order in Council is also sent for their perusal, and approval or criticism. In the circumstances the reasons for the Board's decision are not known until some time after the actual decision has been declared and have not in consequence been set out above.

Hanosa Ramosa v. Kalimchand (C. P.). Sir G. Lowndes and Mr. Parikh moved to be discharged from an undertaking given by them on an application for stay of execution heard by the Board on 31st July last.

The parties to the suit are the two sets of Jains Digambari and Sitambari and the dispute relates to the image of Shri Anatariksha Parasnathji at Shirpur. The Sitambari sect hold that the idol should be covered or dressed; the Digambari hold otherwise. The Respondents had given an undertaking that no alteration should be made in the existing condition of the idol.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes represented the Appellants.

There was some discussion as to whether the idol was clothed or not at the time the undertaking was given.

The Board ordered that it should be restored to the condition in which it was on the 31st July.

In Jacob v. Wills (Bengal), Mr. E. B. Raikes, who had obtained special leave to appeal from the decree of the High Court in this breach of promise action, now applied for special leave to appeal in formâ pauperis or in the alternative to continue the appeal in formâ pauperis. LORD ATKINSON observed that it was the practice in the House of Lords not to grant leave to appeal in formâ pauperis unless their Lordships had reason to believe that the judgment of the Court appealed from was wrong.

Mr. Raikes then explained the facts of the case.

Mr. Hyam who opposed the application on behalf of the Defendant-Respondent contended that the applicant had not given a full and candid exposure of complete poverty.

Leave was granted to continue the appeal in formâ pauperis.

different schools of Mahomedan law in a nutshell. It is only authors who have a thorough mastery of the subject who can condense it so lucidly within such a small compass. In the present edition he has largely re-cast and re-arranged the work and rewritten important portions of it. He presents the leading general principles of succession, inheritance, marriage, gift, etc., in the form of propositions under each appropriate heading. Then the propositions are elucidated in the notes that follow, where variations and exceptions to the general rules are also noticed and references are given to the leading decisions in their connection. The Privy Council decisions which remove the conflicts amongst Indian decisions or are the last words on the subject are brought up-to-date. One can never cease to be a student and a lawyer whose notions of Mahomedan law have got rusty cannot do better than glance through this work at their leisure and we are sure they will be greatly benefited. The brevity of the work is to our mind its greatest recommendation. We have been at pains to find out any material omission and the only one that we have been able to discover is the absence of reference to Act No. XLII of 1923 which makes provision for the better management of wakf property and the keeping and publication of accounts in respect of such properties. But when it is remembered that the Local Government can grant exemptions regarding its provisions, this pious piece of legislation is, perhaps, of not much serious consequence. This work is undoubtedly the best first-aid one can get in acquiring a workable knowledge of a very difficult subject.

Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill, certification of.

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in his speech opening the 1925 session of the Indian Legislature at Delhi announced that His Excellency the Governor of Bengal has certified the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Bill leave to introduce which was refused by the Bengal Legislative Council last month and Lord Reading accorded his full approval and support to it. Sec. 72E (1) provides that when such leave has been refused by the Legislative Council "the Governor may certify that the passage of the Bill is essential for the discharge of his responsibility for the subject and thereupon the Bill shall, notwithstanding that the Council have not consented thereto, be deemed to have been passed and shall, on signature by the Governor, become an Act of the Local Legislature."

Cl. (2) of the section provides that on certification, "the Governor shall forthwith send an authentic copy thereof to the Governor-General, who shall reserve the Act for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure." Lord Reading announced that His Excellency proposes to adopt this course. There is a proviso to this clause that in case of emergency the Governor-General instead of reserving the Bill for Royal assent may give his assent and thereupon the Act comes into force at once subject to disallowance by His Majesty in Council. As the Ordinance covering the same grounds as the Bill will remain in force for six months from its promulgation, it was not necessary to exercise the powers conferred by the proviso. Cl. (3) of the section provides that the certified Act which has been reserved for Royal assent "shall not be so presented, until copies thereof have been laid before each House of Parliament for not less than eight days on which that House has sat." Thus the Royal assent cannot be given before the Parliament meets. On the certified Act receiving Royal assent, we expect, the Ordinance will be repealed and a Bill will be introduced in the Indian Legislature for making provision for appeal to the High Court where the Bengal Government chooses to prosecute any of the persons arrested. The Bengal Act did not make any provision in this behalf because the Government of India and the Indian Legislature are alone competent to legislate concerning the Calcutta High Court.

Appeal against an order releasing an accused on probation of good conduct.

Is "no sentence" a "sentence of less than a certain maximum" mentioned in a section? This is the question discussed in a recent case by Boyce, J., in the Allahabad High Court (46 All. 828). The question arose out of an application in revision against an order of the Sessions Judge rejecting an appeal against an order of a Magistrate made under sec. 562 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in a summary trial. Sec. 562 of the Code empowers a Court to release a first offender on probation of good conduct instead of sentencing him to punishment. Sec. 414 of the Code lays down that there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in any case tried summarily in which a Magistrate empowered to act under sec. 260 passes a sentence of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only. The precise question for consideration is whether sec. 414 bars an appeal from an order under sec. 562. Sec. 406 gives an appeal from the order of a Magistrate of the first class to the Sessions Judge, sec. 414 bars the appeal in cases of summary convictions where the sentence passed is one of fine and the amount does not exceed two hundred rupees. When an order is made under sec. 562 the accused is no doubt convicted but in the discretion of the Court no sentence is passed on him and he is released on his entering into a bond to appear and receive sentence when called upon during such period (not exceeding three years) as the Court may direct and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour. Is this "no sentence," a sentence less than that of a fine of two hundred rupees.

We entirely agree with Boyce, J., in answering the question in the negative. The section says in what cases there shall be no appeal. It does not say in what cases there shall be an appeal. That is provided for in secs. 408 and 410, the former giving an appeal from the order of a Magistrate of the first class to the Sessions Judge and the latter, an appeal from the Sessions Judge to the High Court. Is there any inconsistency in the Legislature taking away a right of appeal where there is a definite sentence and yet allowing an appeal when no sentence is passed. The answer is not far to seek. It is quite conceivable, as observed by His Lordship, that many persons would regard an order of release under sec. 562 having to enter into a bond to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour for any period up to three years as something very much more serious than a substantive sentence of fine of perhaps ten rupees or even two hundred rupees.

Sec. 414 being then no bar to an appeal against an order under sec. 562 it follows that sec. 413 is also not. That section lays down that there shall be no appeal where a Court of Session passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence of fine not exceeding fifty rupees. The conclusion then is that an order under sec. 562 is always appealable. In this connection it is worth noticing that under the old Code, sec. 414 barred an appeal against a sentence of whipping only passed in a summary trial but by sec. 25 of the amending Act of 1923, sec. 414 has been so altered as to take away sentences of whipping from the operation of the section.

Admissibility in evidence of peon's reports.

In a letter which appears in another column, Mr. Romes Chandra Bhattacharyya draws attention to the ruling of Neave, A. C. J., of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court reported at 81 I. C. 533 as the last word on the controverted question as to the admissibility by themselves in evidence of process-server's reports. We do not see, however, that this decision advances matters beyond the point where they were left by the decisions reported at 13 A. L. J. 935 and 25 I. C. 529 to which the same correspondent referred in a letter which appeared at 28 C. W. N. clxxvii (187n). All of them hold that reports by Civil Court peons of delivery of possession are, without more, admissible as being public documents within sec. 74 of the Evidence Act. As pointed out, however, in our editorial note at p. clxvi (166n) of the same volume, to make a peon's report admissible by itself, it must not only be shown to be a public document, but further that it is the record of an act coming within the provisions of sec. 35 of the Evidence Act. None of the above cases deal with this latter aspect of the question, and the only case where the question is dealt with from the point of view of the applicability of sec. 35 is reported at 35 Mad. 670, to which our attention was drawn by Mr. Radharomon Mookerjee at p. clxxxvii (187n) of 28 C. W. Notes. But what is stated in that case on the point by Sundara Ayyar, J., is only an obiter dictum of one of the two Judges who constituted the Bench. It does not seem to us, in the circumstances, that our correspondent's expectation that the ruling in 81 I. C. 533 "will hush all opposition into silence," will be realised. Upon further consideration, in the light of the assistance we have been favoured with by our correspondents, we would still adhere to the view we expressed in our editorial note at p. clxvi (166n) of 28 Calcutta Weekly Notes upon certain suggestions made by Mr. Mahananda Chaudhuri and published at p. clxi (161n) of 28 Calcutta Weekly Notes.

HYPOTHECATION OF MOVEABLES.

In the early stages of the evolution of law, a security was looked upon only as a gage for the due discharge of his obligation by the debtor. The creditor was not entitled to realise the debt out of the security pledged to him. If the creditor had taken a conditional transfer of the pledge, it was to be forfeited on the failure of the obligor to discharge his obligation. But subsequently this penal provision was removed and the creditor was given the right to detain the security till he was repaid the debt due to him.

In the form of security known as "pledge" the pledgee was given the possession of the security and he was entitled to keep the security in his possession till the redemption of the debt due to him. The pledgee was under a corresponding obligation to take a proper and reasonable care of the security. If the security was impaired for lack of prudent care the pledgor was entitled to damages. Hence "pledge" did not attain popularity among the Romans and was almost replaced by the Greek form of security known as "Hypotheca." In this there was neither a transfer of ownership nor a change of possession. The debtor simply agreed to hold the property as a security for the due performance of his obligation. The Roman agriculturists were enamoured of Hypotheca because it allowed them to raise a debt or enter into any contract which might give rise to pecuniary liability on the security of their farming-stock without parting with the possession of the same. Change of possession was the essence of the previous form of security and that operated very hard upon the farmers inasmuch as it brought about a complete suspension of their work. Initially, it was looked upon as a deferred pledge, more suited to contingent liabilities as in the case of arrears of rent due from a tenant, but in due course of time the hypothecatae was given the right to bring to sale the security in the event of the failure on the part of the debtor to discharge the debt.

Hypothecation of moveables is recognised by English Law and there are express provisions for this form of security in the English Bills of Sale Act.

The Hindu Law as well as the Mahomedan Law made no distinction between mortgages of land and pledges of moveables. In the Anglo-Indian Law of the present day there is no Act or statute dealing with the hypothecation of moveables. There is no provision either in the Transfer of Property Act or in the Indian Contract Act dealing with this subject. But it does not follow therefrom that such transactions are invalid or that British Courts have declined to recognise them. There are numerous cases in which mortgage of moveables has been upheld. The earliest case on the point is In the matter of the claim of Dadie Bibee, Debnarain Bose v. A. S. Leisk reported in Hydes Reports, Vol. 2, p. 267. On the peculiar facts of this case it was laid down therein by His Lordship Levinge, J., that to constitute a lien on any property there must be a clear agreement for the specific appropriation of the property, and further the property must be in the possession of the party who claims the lien. This case was by implication dissented from in the case of Deans v. Richardson, (1871) 3 N. W. P. H. C. R. p. 54. The points raised in this case were, firstly, whether a mortgage of moveables is valid? Secondly, whether the delivery of possession was a condition precedent to the validity of the mortgage? Their Lordships Turner and Turnbull, JJ., observe at p. 59: "Now, without going at length into the numerous English authorities cited by the learned Counsel in the course of their arguments, we may lay it down as the result of the latest rulings that by the common law of England where goods are mortgaged and left in the possession of the original owner the circumstance that they are so left is not to be held as a fraud per se rendering the mortgage liable to be defeated as between the mortgagee and third parties, such as bond fide purchasers or judgment creditors. . . . ."

. . . . . When recently the proposed Code of Contract Law was discussed in this country the provision which the Indian Law Commissioner proposed for the security of bond fide purchasers of chattels from persons in possession was not only denounced as at variance with the received practice of the Courts, but as undesirable in this country." To the same effect is the case of Shyam Soonder v. Cheita and another, (1871) 3 N. W. P. H. C. R. p. 71, wherein it has been laid down that a mortgage may be supported if proved to have been made bond fide, although the property mortgaged may have been left in the possession of the mortgagor and mortgages of chattels may be made by parole.

Now with reference to case-law, it is proposed to deal in this article with some of the incidents of this contract. Let us consider, firstly, whether a bond fide purchaser for value of goods, subject to a lien, without notice, is bound by the lien?

In English Law it has been held that goods included in a bill of sale and left with the original owner can be purchased in the ordinary course of business by an innocent and honest purchaser: National Mercantile Bank v. Hampson, (1880) 5 Q. B. D. 177. The decision of this case turned on the fact that the holders of the bill of sale suffered the pledgor to hold himself out as having not only the possession of the goods but the property in them and therefore the pledgor in the ordinary course of business was entitled to sell the same to a person without notice that they did not belong to him. By leaving the property with the obligor, the obligee assists in the commission of fraud and therefore when there is a competition between the obligee and an innocent purchaser, equity inclines in favour of, and shields, the latter against the claim of the former. Again under sec. 108 of the Indian Contract Act, any person, who is, by the consent of the owner, in possession of any goods, may transfer the ownership of the goods of which he is so in possession. Much more then it would be reasonable to assume that the real owner can effectively transfer the property in the goods to an innocent purchaser which are only subject to an undisclosed hypothecation. In this connection it will be interesting to turn to the case of Chidambara v. Muthaya, I. L. R. 5 M. 330. In that case M pledged his ship to C as security for a bond debt of Rs. 1,500, repayable by two instalments. S seized the ship in French territory for a debt due by M and the French Court sold the ship. C made a claim on the proceeds of the sale in the hands of the Court. The Court held that "whether or not his lien was destroyed by the sale of the ship in French territory, C was not entitled to any of the proceeds of the sale either at the date of the sale or of his claim in the French Court." Their Lordships observe at p. 393: "Plaintiff had no right in the sale proceeds of the ship at the date of the sale or at the date of the claim made by him which Defendant resisted. Those proceeds in so far as they were more than available for Defendant's claim belong to Manjirasa. All that Plaintiff could claim of Manjirasa was payment at the due date which had not arrived. He could not say of anything belonging to Manjirasa save what had been pledged to him, that he was entitled to it or had acquired any right to it." There are many other cases in support of the proposition that a bond fide purchaser for price without notice of the existence of the encumbrance acquires a good title.

Secondly, whether a suit to enforce the hypothecation of moveables is a suit of the nature of Small Causes?

If the hypothecatee sues for the possession of the moveables secured, the suit is of the nature of Small Causes, but a Small Cause Court cannot try a suit for the enforcement of the charge by the sale of the security. In the case of Kalka Prasad v. Chandan Singh, I. L. R. 10 A. p. 20, Chandan Singh executed a deed in lieu of Rs. 100 in favour of Muhammad Husain Khan on the 17th July 1885 and as collateral security hypothecated certain property described in the deed as "Khet-naishakar" (literally a field of sugar cane). The deed was duly registered. Subsequently on the 13th October 1885, the obligee of the bond, Muhammad Husain Khan, made an endorsement on the deed purporting to sell or assign the bond to Kalka Prasad, the Plaintiff-Appellant in the case. In the meantime Chandan Singh cut down the crops and sold the same to Mendu Khan and Imam Ali. The Plaintiff then brought the suit for the selling price of the sugar cane crop. Mr. Justice Mahmood, in repelling the contention that no second appeal lay on the ground that the suit was of the nature of Small Causes, relied upon the case of Surajpal Singh v. Jai Ramgir, I. L. R. 7 A. 855, and held that a suit which seeks to recover a sum of money by the enforcement of hypothecation of certain cattle by their attachment and sale was a suit not cognisable by the Small Cause Court and as such could be made the subject of second appeal. Sir Barnes Peacock has likewise held in the case of Ram Gopal Shah v. Ram Gopal Shah and others, 9 W. R. 136. At p. 136 the learned Judge observes: "It appears to us that this is not a suit to recover personal property or the value of personal property but that it is a suit to ascertain what is due to the Plaintiff on the mortgage deed and to have it declared that the Plaintiff has a lien on the buffaloes to that extent and to make the buffaloes available for realising the amount."

Thirdly, whether the rights of the hypothecatee are transferable?

The hypothecatee-rights are assignable and the transfer can be effected either by parole or by an endorsement on the back of the deed of hypothecation, if any. No registration is required. See Kalka Prasad v. Chandan Singh, I. L. R. 10 A. 20 at p. 22. Hypothecation of moveables can be created by parole or by an instrument registered or unregistered. No particular formalities are required for the creation of this form of security.

Fourthly, whether the lien of the hypothecatee attaches to the property substituted for the original security?

In the case of mortgage of immoveable property a mortgagee is entitled to a charge upon the property which, through no fault of the mortgagee, has taken the place of the property originally mortgaged. Further sec. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act enacts that a mortgagee has got a charge on the surplus of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property for arrears of rent or revenue. By parity of reasoning, the hypothecatee-lien should also attach to the property replaced for the original security. But the mortgagee of moveables, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, is not entitled to proceed against the substituted property, as being subject of his charge.

It has been shown above that the hypothecatee can effectively sell the security to an innocent purchaser without notice of the lien. In that case the obligee cannot pursue his remedy against the security in the hands of the bond fide purchaser without notice. He can only look to the obligor for the recovery of his debt. In other words, the moment the security is sold to a purchaser without notice, the hypothecation vanishes and the relationship between the parties to the contract becomes that of debtor and creditor. Therefore if the hypothecator purchases some property with the sale proceeds, the hypothecatee cannot attach his charge to the substituted security. In the case of Khandaswami Chetti v. Adimoola Chetti, 47 M. L. J. 704, the owner of two bulls hypothecated them to another but he remained in possession of them. Subsequently he sold the bulls and with the sale proceeds purchased a pair of bulls some days after. When a creditor tried to attach these bulls the mortgagee claimed that his hypothecation right extended to the substituted bulls. His Lordship Justice Devadoss held that the right of a hypothecatee of chattels does not attach itself to goods or chattels purchased with the sale proceeds of chattels or goods mortgaged unless there is a contract that he should have a right against the substituted articles. His Lordship has further distinguished between the rights of a mortgagee of immoveable property and those of a mortgagee of moveable property.

MEASUREMENT PAPERS PREPARED BY BUTWARA AMEENS, IF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

It is needless to describe the difficulties, delays and expenses that usually attend the collection of exact information about Butwara Ameens mostly working in the Mofussil. Whether they are dead or alive, their production in Court, if alive, particularly when their deposition is required long after the partition proceedings terminated, for the formal proof of the measurement papers of Butwara made by them, is by no means easy and even if they are produced in Court, they usually depose to facts stated in the records prepared by them, by refreshing their memory from these documents to be proved by them, having had no independent recollection about the same.

Though the matter is absolutely formal the process is laborious and expensive. Apparently Butwara Ameens fall within the definition of "Public Officer" as defined in sec. 2, sub-sec. (17), cls. (d), (g) and (h) of the Civil Procedure Code and sec. 21, clauses fourth and ninth of the Indian Penal Code and so the map, chitta or other measurement papers prepared by the Butwara Ameens as deputed by the Collector to make a partition necessarily fall within the definition of "public documents" as defined in sec. 74, sub-sec. (1), cl. (iii) of the Indian Evidence Act and as such are admissible in evidence under secs. 13 and 35 of the Evidence Act (vide also 2 Indian Case 367, 513).

It is submitted that the old decision in Mohi Chowdhry v. Dhiro Misrani, 6 C. L. R. 139, to the effect that these measurement papers are not public documents does not seem to be good law. There is an authority to the following effect that chittas prepared for the purpose of distributing the public revenue on a partition of an estate is a public document and is evidence of the state of affairs then existing and admissible in evidence. (Vide Nibendra Kishore v. Durga Charan, 15 C. W. N. 515) and that a butwara khasra map brought into existence in pursuance of a partition effected under the Estates Partition Act of 1876 by a Collector is a document of title admissible in evidence under sec. 13 of the Evidence Act (vide Ajodhya Prasad v. Kamal Narayan, 38 I. C. 491).

Having regard to the rulings referred to above and the principles involved therein together with the definitions of "Public Officers" and public documents as aforesaid, the map, chitta and other measurement papers prepared by Butwara Amcens deputed by the Collector to make a partition should be declared as public documents and as such provable either by the production of the originals or the certified copies of them, to save the immense trouble and expense as narrated above.

PROCESS SERVER'S REPORT OF PUBLIC DOCUMENT.

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir,

In continuation of my letter, dated 18th July 1924, published in 28 C. W. N., p. clxxxvii (187n), I have the honour to point out that my view that process server's report should go in evidence without formal proof finds also support in a recent case of Bakur v. Emperor, 81 I. C. 533. In that case, it was contended by one of the parties that a certified copy of the process server's report relating to the delivery of possession is not admissible in evidence as it is not a public document. The learned Court, however, did not agree with this contention and held as follows:—

"Sec. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act includes in the definition of public documents 'documents forming the acts or record of the acts of official bodies and tribunals.' The delivery of possession in execution of a decree is undoubtedly an act of a tribunal, and a report made to the Court by an officer of the Court that its order has been carried out, which report is preserved as one of the Court records, is undoubtedly a public document. It has been proved by a certified copy as permitted by sec. 77 of the Evidence Act."

The arguments advanced by the said learned Court appear to be quite convincing and ought to hush all opposition into silence.

I shall feel obliged if you will kindly publish the above in your much esteemed journal.

I have the honour, etc.

INTERPRETATION OF SEC. 18 OF THE CALCUTTA RENT ACT.

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir,

Would you or any of your numerous readers kindly enlighten me as to the true interpretation of sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act which has seemed to be very much perplexing to this your humble correspondent in view of the procedure followed by the President of the Tribunal?

Under Sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act an application is to be made to the Rent Controller by the landlord or the tenant for standardisation of rent of any premises leased or rented by such landlord or tenant. After the application is made the Controller registers it as a case, issues notice to the Opposite Party under cl (4) of the section calling for a written statement and then fixes a day for hearing. Under sec. 17, cl (2) of the Act the Controller is to follow the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as may be, in the matter of summoning witnesses and production of documents. The final order is passed under sec. 15, Cl. (1) of the Act and the Controller grants a certificate certifying the standard rent of the premises. This final order may be passed ex parte or after contest. It does not appear that the Act has made any difference so far as the nature of the order is concerned. In any case, if any party questions the order of the Controller, sec. 18 of the Act says that he may within a certain date apply to the President of the Tribunal for revision of such order. The certified copy of the Rent Controller's order is to be filed along with this application for revision. Sec. 24 of the Act says that in revising the decision of the Controller, the President shall follow, as nearly as may be, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code for the regular trial of suits. Now how is this petition for revision under sec. 18 to be made? Does the law prescribe a special form for the petition or would a simple application to the President stating that the Petitioner questions the validity of the order of the Controller and prays for its revision serve the purposes of the section? If there is already an application under sec. 15 to the Rent Controller and if there is already a written statement in the original record, is it necessary under sec. 18 that there would be a new application with all the details of the case of the person aggrieved by the order of the Controller and that there should be a new written statement on the same lines and that the position of the parties as Plaintiff and Defendant before the Controller may be, quite possibly, reversed under the circumstances before the Tribunal? Is there any provision for it in the Rent Act? Does not this procedure altogether start a new case before the Tribunal? Where is the guarantee that the new application and the new written statement will be exactly on the same lines with the previous ones that have been already in the record? If it is at all intended that these pleadings would be exactly identical with those that were filed before the Controller, then where is the necessity for new pleadings before the Tribunal? If it is intended that these pleadings might be other than (which is quite possible) what are already in the record then how is it pertinent to say that by an order under sec. 18 of the Act the Controller's decision is revised? If the Controller had to decide upon one set of pleadings and if the President decides entirely upon a new set, how can any reasonable man say that the one order revises the other? It is to be expected that upon a new set of pleadings, the decision must be new in most cases but is that a revision of the Controller's order? Unless at least the pleadings are identical before the inferior and the superior Court one cannot possibly say that the higher Court revises the order of the lower. Besides where is the law which provides that parties are entitled to put forward new pleadings before the Tribunal under sec. 18 of the Act? If the pleadings before the Tribunal are all new, the evidence to be adduced would necessarily be new on new points raised in the new pleadings. If this is so and if the decision of the President proceeds upon these new pleadings and the new evidence to be adduced, where is the necessity then of a certified copy of the order by the Controller to be filed and what is the meaning of the time-limit as it is provided for in sec. 18? If the proceeding before the President is completely new, then why is this link with the old proceeding before the Controller? How can the order of the President passed on the basis of these new materials be said to revise the order of the Controller? Rankin, J., says in the case reported in 49 Cal. p. 931 at p. 937 that this right of revision (under sec. 18) seems to be only a right to have a retrial of the case before a higher Court and that the existence of this right puts the Controller in the position of a Court subordinated to the Tribunal. Now what does a retrial mean? Does it mean the trial of a new case with new pleadings and new evidence on new points raised or the fresh trial of an old case? If it means the latter (as it cannot, by any stretch of reasoning, mean the former), which is the old case referred to? Necessarily it is the case before the Rent Controller and the opinion of Rankin, J., seems to be that this case is to be retried. If it is so then how is it that new pleadings are insisted upon in the Tribunal without which the finding is that the President has got nothing to adjudicate upon and the simple application for revision of the order of the Controller falls to the ground? If the proceeding before the Tribunal is admitted to be a continuation of the proceeding before the Rent Controller, how can new pleadings be called for before the Tribunal? Does the Act anywhere provide by implication or otherwise, that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code may be overridden? Does the Code of Civil Procedure provide for an alteration of one's pleadings without the permission of the Court? Does it provide that you can make a new case even with the permission of the Court? If not, how is all this allowed in the Tribunal? Is there no sanctity in the general provisions of the law of procedure before the Tribunal and where is the law that provides that there must be two complaints and two written statements in the same case?

Yours faithfully,

HEMNATH BHATTACHARYYA,
Vakil.

Review.

THE INDIAN STAMP ACT (II OF 1899). By M. N. Basu, M.A., B.L. Eastern Law House, College Sqr., North, Calcutta, 1925. Price Rs. 6.

Mr. Basu has followed up his successful commentary on the Court Fees Act with this sister compilation on the Stamp Act. As in the case of the Court Fees Act, the various provincial amendments of the Stamp Act have made the work of preparing an All-India commentary on the stamp law a more complicated business than it used to be when there was one Stamp Act for the whole of British India. But these provincial amendments deal with the amount of stamps and have left the principles of the parent enactment as interpreted in judicial decisions untouched. Much the greater part of the book is thus taken up in annotating the sections and articles of the principal Act. The case-law has been brought up-to-date and the commentaries arranged with excellent judgment under suitable headings. This is followed by reprints of the various provincial amending Acts and of the texts in extenso of the repealed Acts of 1869 and 1879, and material portions of still earlier enactments, reference to these being constantly needed in practice in dealing with old documents. The notification reducing and remitting fees, Rules framed under sec. 75 and the Sale of Stamp Rules made by the provincial Governments and a concise subject index go to complete a most useful hand-book for ready reference and help on all questions of stamp law that may arise in Courts of law and outside. The get-up of the book is commendable and the price, in relation to value, moderate.

Recent decisions not yet reported

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES AND MUKERJI, JJ. S. A. No. 1589 of 1922. NALINI KANTA MUKERJEE and anr., Appellants v. HARI NIKARI and anr., Respondents. The 6th January 1925.

Suit to set aside ex parte fraudulent decree—Proceeding under Or. IX, r. 13, C. P. C., if operates as res judicata on the point of service of summons.

In 1916 the Appellants had instituted a suit against the Respondents on a hand-note and obtained an ex parte decree. The Respondents had unsuccessfully applied under Or. IX, r. 13, C. P. Code, to set aside the ex parte decree, contending that summonses had been suppressed, and finally instituted the present suit in 1920 to set aside the ex parte decree on the grounds that the claim was a false one and the decree was obtained by perjured evidence and that summonses had been suppressed. The Munsif dismissed the suit, but the lower Appellate Court decreed the suit on the grounds, firstly, that the present Plaintiff knew nothing about the ex parte case, and secondly, that the claim was fraudulent as the hathchitta upon which the original suit was based was made out in the absence of the alleged executants and was an untrue document. Hence the present appeal:

Held—That so far as the second ground of the decision was concerned, the balance of authority was that it was not open to raise pleas of this nature, if the suit had been decreed after contest, or if the suit had been decreed ex parte and it was established that summonses were served on the Defendants. As to the first ground, the decision under Or. IX, r. 13 did not in the circumstances of the present case operate as res judicata in the present case, and as there was a finding of the lower Appellate Court that summonses were never served on the present Respondents, the lower Appellate Court was right in setting aside the ex parte decree. L. R. 29 I. A. 99. relied on.

Babu Abinash Chandra Ghosh for the Appellants.

Babu Nirode Bandhu Roy for the Respondents.

J. N. R. Appeal dismissed.

(CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.) Before SUHRAWARDY AND CUMING, JJ. CIVIL REV. No. 1206 of 1924. MOHENDRA NATH GHOSE and others, Defendants-Petitioners v. KALI DAS and others, Plaintiffs and some Defendants, Opposite Party. The 8th December 1924.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 33, r. 3—Suit in formâ pauperis—Leave for—Pleader authorised to file applications, if an "authorised agent" under the rule.

The Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 2 in this rule applied to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Howrah, for leave to sue in formâ pauperis under Or. 33, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. The petition for leave on behalf of the Opposite Party No. 2, Giri Bala Dasi, a pardanashin lady who was then in Burma, was presented on her behalf by her pleader. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the pleader who presented the application on behalf of Giri Bala was her "authorised agent" within the meaning of Or. 33, r. 3 of the Code and granted her permission to sue in formâ pauperis as prayed for.

Held—That the finding of the Court below, that the pleader who presented the application on behalf of Giri Bala was her authorised agent, being one of fact could not be interfered with in revision. Kishori Mohan v. Gourmoni, 15 W. R. 198.

The rakalatnama empowered the pleader to file all applications. The rule requires presentation by "an authorised agent" and not by "duly authorised agent."

Messrs. N. N. Sen Gupta and Khitish Chandra Chackrabarty and Arun Kumar Sarkar for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Brojo Lal Chackrabarty and Rupendra Kumar Mitter for the Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 2.

Babu Hari Das Chatterjee for the Opposite Party No. 3.

H. D. C. Rule discharged with costs.

The Indian Seasons and Festivals.

Our contemporary of the Englishman recently remarked that the Indian seasons recognise no spring. But this is not so. In India the year is divided into six seasons. The Saraswati pooja which is just over marks the advent of the Indian spring. At the Saraswati pooja Indian ladies and children wear clothes of the basanti (light yellow) colour, which is the tint of the falling leaves and the new leaves that shoot out in the spring. Saraswati is the goddess of culture—literature, art and music. The worship of the Muse is thus identified with the spring in this country as it is all over the civilized world, both ancient and modern. Though Saraswati pooja marks the wane of winter and the advent of the spring, the months of Falgun and Choitra (middle of February to middle of April) are properly speaking the spring season. Although Saraswati pooja is pre-eminently a festival of the cultured classes, the principal spring festival of the masses is the dole jatra which is called the Fagua in up-country, named after the month of Falgun (March) which is the carnival month both in India and Europe. The Basanti pooja, at which the Divine Mother, the Sakti or the Supreme Power in Nature from which everything springs into life is worshipped, is held in the spring. The last day of the spring which closes the Bengali year, is a gala day of the workmen and is celebrated by the Charak pooja which is symbolic of the annual cycle. Then follows the summer (Grishma) commencing from the 1st of Bysak, the Bengali New Year day, and extending to the end of Joista (middle of June). The monsoon is expected to break usually about this time and so Asar and Sraban (middle of June to middle of August) comprise Barsa or the rainy season.

The principal festival of the rainy season is the Katha jatra (the car festival) which is believed to be of Budhistic origin.

After the middle of August the dark clouds disperse, the sky assumes a deep azure hue and white fleecy clouds float and fleet about all over the firmament, marking the advent of Indian autumn, which extends to the middle of October. The autumn is observed as the long vacation in Bengal as it is in England. The Indian autumn is called the Sarat and is welcomed at the end of the rainy season, when the heavy rains cease and floods begin to subside. Towards its close, on the light side of moon, when the moonlight is brighter than it is in any other part of the year, the Durga pooja is celebrated with as much joy and merriment as the Christmas in the European countries. The Bhadra and Aswin (middle of August to middle of October) are the autumn months or Sarat. After the Sarat (autumn) comes the Hemanta or the dewy season when there is more copious precipitation of dew than in any other part of the year. These are the months of Kartik and Agrahayan (middle of October to middle of December). The Devali or Deepabali (feast of light) and the Kali pooja are celebrated in the dark night of the new moon. The crops mature during this season of the dewy nights and sunny days. Its closes with harvesting and the advent of winter. The winter (Seet) months are Pous and Magh (middle of December to middle of February). Now the Christmas and the New Year are regarded all over India as much a festive season as in the Christian countries. But Bengal has also its own winter festivities of which the chief are the Nabanna, when the feast of new rice crop is celebrated and also the Pous Sankranti, the last day of the month of Pous (about the middle of January) when people take their holy bath in the Ganges and cakes are cooked in every home with new rice, fresh brown date-sugar and milk.

'A comparative study of the festive occasions of both in the East and the West would show that man is a nature worshipper all over the world.

The curing section of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

What is precisely the object of sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure? *

The section begins by saying "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained," no finding sentence or order shall be reversed on account of certain defects mentioned in the section, in other words, the only defects that can be condoned under the section are those which are mentioned in the section and those only. It is not a general "curing" section governing all the provisions regarding procedure but in certain specified cases it can be invoked to cure certain defects on the ground that no prejudice has been caused or in the words of the section no failure of justice has been occasioned. Law reports abound with rulings on the interpretation of sec. 537 some of which are very misleading and have a mischievous effect on the administration of justice.

A case comes before the High Court and a certain defect of procedure is discovered and made a ground on behalf of the accused for the proceedings being quashed. The only judgment that the Court can properly give in these circumstances, if it takes a view adverse to the accused, is that so far as the particular case is concerned no failure of justice has been occasioned by the defect of procedure and the Court is not prepared to alter the finding sentence or order in that case, the defect complained of being one of those mentioned in the section. Instead of this we often find the Court laying down that the defect in question disclosed in the case before it is an irregularity which does not vitiate the trial. To make a sweeping observation like that is to say that a defect of a particular nature is really no defect at all. What is the effect of such a judicial pronouncement? The inferior Courts will naturally take the law to be that contained in sec. 537 coupled with its authoritative interpretation by the highest Court and continue to commit the error. It is idle to expect that in the face of such a ruling the subordinate Courts will be cautious not to commit an irregularity which the highest Court holds to be a harmless irregularity, in other words, no irregularity at all, or to go a step further, something wrongly called an irregularity but really a legalised procedure.

It is incumbent on the High Courts to be very careful not to say anything in their judgments which may instead of checking an evil already existing leave open the door for the commission of fresh illegalities in future. It is a matter of regret that some of the decisions do not fulfil these conditions. If a judgment conforms to the cardinal rules regulating judgments of Courts, these shortcomings can easily be avoided. A judgment should contain the points for determination and the decision thereon. When it is pleaded that a certain deviation from the established procedure comes within the scope of sec. 537 the points for determination are—(a) Is it one of the defects mentioned in the section? (b) Has it in the circumstances of the particular case occasioned a failure of justice? The decision of the Court must be either (a) it is or it is not an irregularity contemplated by the section and (b) it has or it has not in the circumstances of the particular case occasioned a failure of justice. There is no scope for a sweeping general observation as to some departure from the regular procedure being an irregularity or not generally for all cases.

It is much to be regretted that this is very often overlooked. On a strict interpretation of sec. 537 one decision under the section cannot serve as a precedent for any future decision. That the legislature was alive to the caution and care with which the section is to be invoked and to the necessity of curtailing the scope of its application will appear from the fact that by the amending Act of 1923, cl. (b) of sec. 537 has been repealed so that want of, or irregularity in, any sanction required by sec. 195 or any irregularity in proceedings taken under sec. 476 is no longer a curable defect. The intention of the legislature as to the proper scope of the section has also been made clear by sec. 148 of the amending Act, 1923, whereby the illustration to the section which was to the effect that when a Magistrate being required by law to sign a document signs it by initials only it is purely an irregularity which does not affect the validity of the proceeding, has been taken out.

SUITS TO SET ASIDE DECREES ON THE GROUND OF FRAUD.

BY DWIJENDRA NATH PAL.

The challenge of decrees of Court on the ground of fraud is an interesting phase of litigation which seems to have been showing signs of development in recent years. It is, no doubt, a great pity that the machinery for administration of justice would afford opportunities for its wilful misuse by a dishonest litigant. But it can hardly be helped; for even the sagest legislator cannot ensure a system absolutely incapable of abuse.

The jurisdiction of Courts to vacate prior decrees procured by fraud is a necessary incident of their power of doing justice which is the very reason for their existence. A right of action in reversal of a decree for fraud has been recognised from the earliest times and illustrated by a long line of precedents. The object of such an action is to have an injustice remedied by exposing the fraud by which the course of the law was misdirected. Acts of Court are supposed to be right and just and the conscience of the Judge is never supposed to go wrong. It is a well-known rule that no suit can be maintained to set aside a prior judgment on the ground that the Court was wrong in appreciating the evidence or in judging the case; that is a matter for appeal or revision only. It can, however, be always shown that the Judge was misled unawares by the fraud of a litigant. "A judgment," as Chief Justice Jenkins observed in Nanda Kumar v. Ram Jivan (18 C. W. N. at p. 688) quoting the dictum of an eminent Judge, "like all other acts of the highest judicial authority, is impeachable from without; although it is not permitted to show that the Courts were mistaken, it may be shown that they were misled." Fraud is abhorrent to the judicial conscience and the slightest taint of it in judicial proceedings will not be tolerated by Courts.

But although fraud avoids acts of the highest judicial authority, any and every act of fraud or dishonesty would not justify the reversal of a decree. The solemnity which attaches to a decree of Court renders it absolutely necessary to make out a positive, tangible act of dishonesty leading to a miscarriage of justice, before it can be called in question. A decree may be passed ex parte, on contest or by consent, and in every case it is liable to be impeached on the ground of fraud, though ex parte decrees naturally present the greater field for such litigation. One who seeks to impeach, by a suit, a decree on the ground of fraud, takes on himself a heavy burden of proof. It is not enough for him to show merely a fraudulent or malicious intention on the part of his adversary or connect him with conduct fraught with probable mischief or injury; it must be clearly shown that he was guilty of a wilful suppression of truth or suggestion of falsehood, but for which the decree would not have been passed. "The fraud must be actual positive fraud, a meditated and intentional contrivance to keep the parties and the Court in ignorance of the real facts of the case and obtaining the decree by that contrivance." (Nanda Kumar v. Ram Jivan, 18 C. W. N. at p. 688).

A fraudulent decree thus implies (i) a false claim, (ii) a contrivance to keep the Court in ignorance of the truth and (iii) a decree induced by that contrivance to the prejudice of a party. All these three conditions must co-exist before a decree can be impeached for fraud.

(i) A false claim.—The essence of fraud is concealment of truth and the primary ground for setting aside a decree as fraudulent is the falsity of the claim decreed. The means by which the decree is obtained would be immaterial, unless the claim itself is shown to be untrue.

SCOPE OF SEC. 182 OF THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT.

BY ASHUTOSH GONGOPADHYA, M.A., B.L.

A very important and vexed question of law very frequently arises in Mofussil Courts regarding the scope and meaning of sec. 182 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Apparently the section has been specially enacted to regulate the incidents of the homestead of a raiyat. The necessity for such a special provision arises in view of the fact that, but for such a provision, the incidents of a homestead tenancy, being prima facie a non-agricultural lease, would be governed by contract. The case-law on the subject of Bastoo lands, before the passing of the Act, was uncertain and apparently contradictory. This section is intended to make it clear. No doubt the Bengal Tenancy Act is confined to the amendment of the law regarding agricultural tenancies, and it attracts the incidents of the homestead tenancies within its scope only where the holding of such land is in some sense ancillary to an agricultural tenancy, e.g., where a raiyyot has built a house in a village with a view to living near his agricultural holding. Thus it is apparent that the scope of the present Act regarding homesteads is very limited.

Sec. 182 runs thus:—

"When a raiyyot holds his homestead otherwise than as a part of his holding as a raiyyot, the incidents of his tenancy of the homestead shall be regulated by local custom or usage, and subject to local custom or usage, by the provisions of this Act applicable to land held by a raiyyot."

It follows then, that the section will not apply to tenants of homesteads who are not raiyyots. The incidents of such homestead tenancies will be regulated by contract and by case-law. Nor apparently does this section apply to "tenure-holders" whose rights and obligations are regulated by Chap. III of this Act and the case-law relating to tenures. The section does not of course apply to land which is leased not for purposes of cultivation, nor for purposes ancillary thereto, but for establishing a coal depot, since such a lease does not come within the purview of the Act. And lastly, this section does not apply when a raiyyot holds his homestead as a part of his holding as a raiyyot, i.e., when the homestead of the raiyyot is but a part of his other arable lands which he holds in raiyyoty tenancy. In such a case the whole tenancy is governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act, not on account of sec. 182 which does not apply, but the tenancy being by itself an agricultural one under the general provisions of the Act as applicable to raiyyots.

The section applies to the homesteads of the raiyyot only when the homestead is held "otherwise than as a part of his holding as a raiyyot."

The right interpretation of the section depends upon the meaning of the words "otherwise than as a part of his holding as a raiyyot." When does the raiyyot hold his homestead "otherwise than as a part of his holding as a raiyyot?"

Let us take the simplest case. A is a raiyyot with respect to certain agricultural lands in the village. A takes a lease of another land for homestead purposes and builds his house on it. A's homestead lease does not include any agricultural land. This is a case, where A, the raiyyot, holds his homestead apart from his raiyyoti holding, or to use the language of the section, "otherwise than as a part of his holding as a raiyyot." Therefore the section will apply here, or in other words, the incidents of the homestead lease, though prima facie a non-agricultural lease, will be governed, subject to local custom or usage, by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act as applicable to raiyyots. The result of the use of the words "provisions applicable to land held by a raiyyot" is very far-reaching. Thus in the above example if A, the raiyyot, happens also to be a settled raiyyot of the village, all the incidents of the tenancy of a settled raiyyot will accrue to his tenancy of the homestead in spite of all contracts to the contrary. Though A might acquire by his lease only a temporary interest in the homestead, he would acquire occupancy right in the homestead by the conjoint operation of sec. 182 and sec. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Similarly if A is a non-occupancy raiyyot with respect to his raiyyoty holding he will acquire a similar interest in the homestead also.

The above is the simplest case, and there is practically no difference of opinion in judicial decisions on this point. It may be noted here that there is an obiter dictum in 9 C. W. N. 141 to the effect that "the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to homestead lands, whether situated in towns or outside towns." But with all respect to their Lordships it is submitted that such a proposition is quite untenable on the face of sec. 182, and as a matter of fact that decision seems to have been arrived at without considering the provisions of the section. The mistake in the above obiter is so apparent that the case, so far as the said obiter is concerned, has not been followed in any of the subsequent cases.

Difficulty arises in cases where the homestead of the raiyyot does not by itself form a separate tenancy, but it is only a part of a tenancy in which there are other agricultural lands. Diversity of opinion amongst Moffusil Judges on this very important and frequently arising question is notorious, and the difficulty is all the more seriously felt as there is not a single ruling exactly in point to help the Moffusil Courts.

Remedy for corruption at elections.

The only effective means of checking corruption at election is to make the franchise so wide that it would be impossible for any one to corrupt his constituency. This result has to a great extent been achieved in England by the introduction of universal suffrage. Formerly election petitions were very common in England and the legal profession used to reap a rich harvest after every Parliamentary election. But the last election in England is marked by the practical disappearance of such petitions. The following note in the columns of our contemporary of the Law Times in this connection would be found interesting :—

A very marked feature of the last election is the disappearance of the invariable accompaniment of general elections in days gone by—the cloud of election petitions based on charges of corrupt and illegal practices. Sir Edward Clarke records that, on the defeat, at Cardiff in 1874, of the late Lord Halsbury by nine votes, he congratulated the future Lord Chancellor when he met him in London. “Now,” said I, “you will make a lot of money in election petitions and then they will find you a safe seat and give you office.” Again, in the general election of 1880, when Sir Edward Clarke himself was defeated at Southwark, he records: “Retainers in election petitions came pouring in. Stockport, Gravesend, Cheltenham, Wallingford, Macclesfield, Salisbury, Hereford, Plymouth, Colchester, Evesham, Canterbury, and Sandwich fell to my share.” The extension of the franchise has rendered the corrupt practices which prevailed in days gone by virtually things of the past. It may be said, the more extended the franchise the less is the danger of corrupt practices. This fact is admitted, albeit unconsciously, by an episode in our Parliamentary history. In 1872 the disfranchisement of revenue officers was proposed by the Ministry of Lord Rockingham, who said that seventy elections chiefly depended on the votes of those officers. The measure was carried by large majorities through both Houses. “Had there been,” writes Sir Erskine May, “a franchise so extensive as to leave the general body of the electors free to vote without being overborne by the servants of the Crown it would have been difficult to justify the policy of disfranchisement.” He adds in a footnote: “This principle has since been recognised by the Legislature, and in 1868 the repeal of this qualification accompanied the extended franchises of that time (31 & 32 Vict, c. 79).” The extended franchise of 1918 has given a death-blow to corrupt practices, which cannot operate with success except in cases in which the electorate is comparatively small.

In India both for the provincial and the central legislature, the number of seats are so limited, the constituencies so large and wide in area, the polling stations at such distances from the residence of the voters, transports and communications are so undeveloped, that those who can afford to pay for the conveyance of voters score an immense advantage over those who cannot. The payment of travelling expenses, no doubt, amounts to corrupt practice. But this is more honoured in the breach than in its observance. People who possess and obtain loans of motor cars pull an immense advantage over those who cannot. Elections are becoming so very expensive in India that under the present constitution only people with a long purse or those who are backed by a caucus who can command large funds have only chances of success. Election expenses should therefore be limited here by legislation as in England. A country's legislature ought to be a place for the best brains and not merely of men of means or members of some clique or coterie who can command funds. Universal suffrage is therefore the only remedy for such abuses.

Immunity of witness from arrest when returning from Court.

Sec. 135 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives a witness protection from arrest when returning from the Court where he has been giving evidence. An interesting case under the section came up before the Allahabad High Court before Mr. Justice Boys (Emperor v. Bihari Sing, 46 All. 663). A man named Gopinath came from Allahabad to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut in order to give evidence as a witness though in fact no summons had been served on him. At this time there was a warrant out against him for his arrest in certain execution proceedings. On his arrival at the Court of the Subordinate Judge he asked for protection from arrest until he should be able to return to Allahabad. He was informed that as a witness he could not be arrested and no special orders were necessary. After giving evidence Gopinath paid a visit to his son's house and he was arrested. The learned Judge held that the privilege could not be claimed by a witness returning by any route he chooses. The direct route must be taken in order to keep the privilege intact. His Lordship, however, added, "This of course does not mean that if a witness goes to his destination by a road a few yards out of the way he therefore necessarily loses his protection."

Conflict of laws—Lex Loci Contractus.

Where a contract is made in one country to be performed wholly or partly in another country the Court will look at all the circumstances to ascertain by the law of which country the parties may be presumed to have intended the contract to be governed and will enforce it accordingly unless it should contain stipulations contrary to morality or expressly forbidden by positive law. The principle that in case of a conflict of laws the presumed intention of the contracting parties is the governing factor in the question what law is to be applied was affirmed by the House of Lords in Hamlyso & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, (1894) 'A. C. 202. In a recent case, Jones v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Company, Ltd., (1924) 2 K. B. 730, the Plaintiff, a British subject, claimed to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him while he was a passenger on a steamship belonging to the Defendants, a British Company, owing to the negligence of the Defendants' servants. The Plaintiff alleged that under a contract made in Detroit he was received by the Defendants as a passenger to be carried from New York to Southampton, that the Defendants by their servants were negligent in not properly securing the port-hole glass in his room, and that in consequence his left hand was seriously injured. The Defendants pleaded that they were exempted from liability under the terms of their contract which was to the effect that the carriers were not to be made liable for loss, damage or injury arising from causes of any kind beyond the carriers' control even if such loss, damage or injury might have been caused or contributed to by the neglect or default of the carriers' servants.

The Lord Chief Justice before whom the action was heard held that under the American law the contract was void but it was valid under the English law, and acting according to the well-recognised principle of law enunciated by the House of Lords (in the case mentioned above), the contract was to be interpreted according to the English law, as it was clear that that was the intention of the parties. For the Defendants it was contended that the contract was to be construed very widely and it exempted the Defendants from liability for the negligence or default of their servants, whatever might be the nature of such negligence or default provided that it was beyond the carrier's personal control. It was argued for the Plaintiff on the other hand that the rule of ejusdem generis applied to the words "causes of any kind" and that only such negligence or default was comprised in the condition as related to the matters specified or matters ejusdem generis therewith. His Lordship held that the principle of ejusdem generis applied in the case and the Defendants were not absolved from liability for the injury of which the Plaintiff complained. The Plaintiff, however, lost on the ground that notice of claim was not given to the Defendants within the time stipulated in the contract, the condition whereof bearing on this point was printed on the back of the passenger's tickets which the Plaintiff did not take care to read and follow.

SCOPE OF SEC. 182 OF THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT.

Let us take another case to illustrate the difficulty. A is a raiyot; he takes an under-raiyoty lease of lands which include both homestead and agricultural lands. Will sec. 182 apply in this case?

Some hold that in such a case the section will not apply, and the case will be governed by the ordinary provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act as applicable to an under-raiyot. The reason for such a view apparently is that as the lease itself is an agricultural lease the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act will apply to it even without the intervention of sec. 182, which was enacted to cover those special cases only which would not ordinarily fall within its scope, but yet owing to the exigencies of the circumstances of the case they must be drawn within its ambit for the better protection of the interest of the raiyyot in his homestead. We shall discuss the merits of this view after we have given the other view and the reasons that support it.

That other view is that, in the given example, the provisions of sec. 182 will still apply provided the circumstances of the case do not militate against the requisite conditions mentioned in the section. Those requisite conditions to attract the operation of the section are the following:—

(a) A person must be a raiyyot (of any description) with regard to certain agricultural lands in the village.

(b) The homestead must be the raiyyot's homestead.

(c) The homestead must not form a part of the raiyyoti holding mentioned in (a), or in the language of the section, the raiyyot must hold the homestead "otherwise than as a part of his holding as a raiyyot."

Let us see if the circumstances of the given case fulfil all the above conditions.

In the given case, (1) A has a raiyyoti holding.

(2) The homestead certainly belongs to him or in the language of the section, it is his homestead.

(3) The homestead does not form a part of his raiyyoti holding mentioned in (1), or, in other words, the raiyyot holds his homestead otherwise than as a part of his raiyyoti holding, inasmuch as he holds the homestead as a part of his under-raiyyoti holding.

Thus this case satisfies all the required conditions, and there seems to be no bar to the application of the section to the case above.

SUITS TO SET ASIDE DECREES ON THE GROUND OF FRAUD.

By DWIJENDRA NATH PAL.

The worst and the essential part of the contrivance is the putting forth of a false claim and it is easy to see that, in the absence of this element, the contrivance would lose all its powers of mischief. Thus in the case of Narsing v. Rafikan (I. L. R. 37 Cal. 197), where the claim was not shown to be untrue, the Court refused to vacate a decree on the mere ground of non-service of summons and ignorance of the suit. A distinction has naturally arisen between non-service of summons and suppression of summons, as the latter only can be called a fraud. Suppression of summons is, no doubt, an intentional contrivance to keep the adversary and the Court in ignorance of the facts, but it is difficult to see how it can give a right of action where the claim decreed is true. The claim being true, the suit must ultimately have the same result even if it be retried after due service of summons and no useful purpose is served by vacating the prior decree. It seems therefore that even mere suppression of summons should be no ground for a fresh suit, unless the claim is shown to be false. Though a fraud of the worst kind, it is, in itself, inchoate and incomplete, unless combined with other elements. In practice, however, actual suppression of summons is seldom proved and the inference from non-service of summons to suppression of summons is often a long step, not always justified.

Neither would the Court entertain a suit for reversal of a decree on the ground of its being obtained on perjured evidence, where the reality of the claim is not challenged. This was clearly pointed out in the cases of Mosul Huq v. Surendra Nath (16 C. W. N. 1002) and Kashiswar v. Amiraddin (23 C. W. N. 133). If a person gets a true claim decreed by adducing false evidence, there is, in reality, no injustice and consequently no right of action. Courts have also refused to entertain such suits on grounds of public policy. Falsehood, perjury, fraud or dishonesty will, of course, never be tolerated by Courts, but, in their anxiety to punish fraud or trickery, they will never open fresh gates to litigation by nullifying prior judgments where there has been no miscarriage of justice. The supposed remedy will, in such a case, be worse than the disease itself, for a fresh litigation always means a fresh field for fraud and perjury which render the attainment of justice very uncertain.

(ii) A wilful contrivance.—The placing of a false claim before the Court is no doubt the essence of fraud, but even this can be no ground for reversal of a decree where there has been no contrivance to keep the Court and the adversary in ignorance of the truth. The success of a false claim is impossible unless it has the appearance of truth. The contrivance which gives it this disguise and thereby misleads the Court, is the other element of fraud which must be proved in each case. In the absence of any such contrivance the decree is final and binding on the parties. The matter, in such a case, reduces itself to the question of res judicata. In contested or consent decrees, there may be a fraud in disguising the truth, the fact of the suit being known to both the parties. In case of ex parte decrees the fraud may moreover amount to a contrivance preventing a defence of the suit. The truth may be concealed or a litigant may be kept out of Court by a hundred devices. The inventions of fraud practically defy enumeration or even a satisfactory generalisation. But the kind of fraud that would justify reversal of a prior decree is indicated in the case of Mahammad Golab v. Mahammad Sulleman (I. L. R. 21 Cal. 612) in which Petheram, C. J., pointed out that "where a decree has been obtained by a fraud practised upon the other side by which he was prevented from placing his case before the tribunal which was called upon to adjudicate upon it, may be set aside by a Court of justice in a separate suit." The learned Judge has observed that to hold otherwise would be to ignore the law of res judicata. It is now settled that a suit for setting aside a decree on the ground of fraudulent suppression of summons would lie even after an unsuccessful application under Or. 9, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, as the question raised in such a suit is substantially different. (Prannath v. Mahesh, I. L. R. 24 Cal. 543; Khagendra v. Prannath, I. L. R. 29 Cal. 395.) The point is not whether the service of summons was regular or sufficient but whether non-service of summons was a part of the scheme and the means or one of the means by which the fraud was committed. But in Lakshmi Charan v. Nur Ali (15 C. W. N. 1010) a contrary view was taken. It was held in this case that "the jurisdiction of the Court trying a suit of this kind is not limited to an investigation merely as to whether the Plaintiff was prevented from placing his case properly at the trial by the fraud of the Defendant. The Court can and must rip up the whole matter for determining whether there has been fraud in the procurement of the decree," and the Plaintiffs' knowledge of the prior suit was thought immaterial. This view of the law was not accepted in the later case of Mosuful Huq v. Surendra Nath (16 C. W. N. 1002) and has not found favour with Courts since then. A reconciliation of the conflicting views was attempted by Fletcher, J., in Kedar Nath v. Hemanta Kumari (18 C. W. N. 447) which was, however, decided on the principle laid down in Mahammad Golab v. Mahammad Sulleman (I. L. R. 21 Cal. 612). It has very recently been held in Nalni Kanta v. Hari Nikari (29 C. W. N. lxxii notes) that the balance of authority is that it is not open to raise pleas of a false claim and perjured evidence, if the suit had been decreed after contest or it was established that the summonses were served on the Defendants.

The mere plea, though true, of a false claim having been decreed would thus be unavailing to the Plaintiff in a suit to set aside a decree for fraud, unless he shows that the Defendant was guilty of a contrivance to conceal the truth or prevent him from entering on a proper defence of the suit.

(iii) Decree induced by a contrivance to the prejudice of the Plaintiff.—If the first two points are established, the third will, in most cases, follow as a matter of course, unless perchance the Court is astute enough to see through the fraud and prevent its perpetration. There may, however, be cases in which a wrong decree may be made, not on account of any fraud or contrivance of a litigant but by a mistake of the Court or otherwise. In such cases, no suit lies to set aside the decrees as fraudulent as the judgment cannot be said to have been induced by any fraud. In Manindra v. Hari Mandal (24 C. W. N. 133) the Court refused to set aside a decree as fraudulent as it was not shown to have been induced by any fraud. It was observed that "it is not permitted to show that the Court was mistaken; it may be shown that it was misled; in other words, where the Court has been intentionally misled by the fraud of a party and a fraud has been committed upon the Court with the intention to procure its judgment, it will vitiate its judgment." The same observations have been repeated with approval in the very recent case of Sarat Kumari v. Mecher Molla (29 C. W. N. li notes).

The jurisdiction to vacate a prior decree for fraud has been universally recognised by the legislature and the Judges but as Jenkins, C. J., pointed out in Nanda Kumar v. Ram Jiban (18 C. W. N. 681), "It is a jurisdiction to be exercised with care and reserve, for it would be highly detrimental to encourage the idea in litigants that the final judgment in a suit is to be merely a prelude to further litigation."

The late Babu Kalinath Mitter.

It is with a deep sense of loss that we record the death of Babu Kalinath Mitter, which took place at his residence in Beadon Street on Monday last, at the ripe age of 88. He was one of the oldest attorneys of the Calcutta High Court having been enrolled in 1868. Even at this great age he used to come to his office and visit the High Court up to the close of the last year. He was a very able member of his profession. For his strength of character and straightforwardness in his speech and conduct he was greatly respected by all who came in contact with him. In the days of his active professional life he won the golden opinion of the Bench and the Bar and made many friends amongst the members of the legal profession and public men. Although he was one of the busiest solicitors of the Calcutta High Court, yet he was a man of remarkable energy and commanded a large criminal practice in the Calcutta Police Court and attended also to civic duties. It was he and Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea, who by their joint efforts, transformed the Calcutta Municipal Corporation, from a bureaucratic body to a popular institution. In those days Sir Henry Harrison was the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation and also the Commissioner of Police and the official influence in the Corporation was supreme. Surendra Nath Banerjea and Kalinath Mitter, both of whom were elected members, gave lead to the non-official members and made their counsel prevail in the administration of the Corporation funds and of the Municipal affairs to the great benefit of the rate-payers of Calcutta. They were not obstructionists and would not oppose for oppositions' sake. But they devoted special study and attention to the details of municipal administration and took a keen interest in the improvement in sanitation, drainage, water-supply, roads and busters and succeeded in effecting all-round improvements without casting any additional burden on the rate-payers. Sir Henry Harrison, the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation, was a member of the Indian Civil Service and had great administrative ability. Notwithstanding his bureaucratic bias he soon came to recognise the ability and the public spirit of these leaders of the representatives of the rate-payers and co-operated with them in conducting the affairs of this city as the responsible executive of a self-governing institution. This state of things continued till Sir Alexander Mackenzie became the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. This independence of the Calcutta Corporation was, however, too much for an autocrat like Sir Alexander Mackenzie. He introduced an Act in the Bengal Legislative Council for restoring executive control over the Calcutta Corporation by curtailing the popular representation and Surendra Nath, Kalinath and Bhupendra Nath put up a valiant fight against it. But when all opposition both in the Legislative Council and outside was ignored and the measure was carried by a nominated official majority in the Council, Babu Kalinath was one of the 28 who resigned their seats in the Calcutta Corporation by way of protest and kept to his determination not to go back to the Corporation till the Act was repealed. Kalinath all the same was held in high regard by the Government and C. I. E. was conferred on him. He seldom took any active part in the country's politics. But he served the interests of his profession and the city of his birth with rare independence and great ability. The legal profession and the civic life of Calcutta are poorer to-day through the death of Babu Kalinath.

The late Mr. Sofiar Rahman.

While mourning the loss of the veteran Babu Kalinath Mitter, we cannot pass over a death in the rank of junior solicitors with but a bare reference. The late Mr. S. M. Sofiar Rahman who died last Wednesday was one of the few Mahomedan solicitors we have in Calcutta. Having had his training with the firm of Messrs. Watkins & Co., he was expected to render a good account of himself in conveyancing and he fully justified such expectations. His honesty and other sterling qualities of the head and heart were already a matter of warm appreciation on the part of the Bar and the officers of the High Court. He had just begun a useful career as a councillor of the Calcutta Corporation where his services were as much appreciated as in Old Post Office Street. It is a matter of deep regret that such a promising career was cut short at the time when Bengal was badly in need of able men like him free from communal narrowness.

Scope of the Legislative authority of the Governor-General in Council.

Sec. 2 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) provides that the Courts shall not grant any relief under the Act except in cases where the Petitioner professes the Christian religion and resides in India at the time of presenting the petition. Since the year 1869 the Courts in India have consistently acted upon the doctrine that mere residence conferred upon them jurisdiction to divorce persons who were not domiciled in India. The validity of a divorce granted by a competent Indian Court to persons merely residing within its jurisdiction was not questioned even in England until the year 1921 when a dissentient note was struck for the first time in Keyes v. Keyes, 1921 P. D. 204. In delivering the judgment in that case Sir Henry Duke, the President of the Probate Division, expressed the opinion that the Indian statute in basing jurisdiction on residence transgressed the limits imposed by the Imperial Parliament upon the Indian legislature. There was no appeal against the judgment of the learned President, but at the instance of the Secretary of State for India the British Parliament passed the Indian Divorces (Validity) Act, 11 and 12 Geo. V. c.

18, which enacted that decrees granted under the Indian Divorce Act and confirmed or made absolute under the provisions of that Act for the dissolution of a marriage the parties to which were at the time of the commencement of the proceedings domiciled in the United Kingdom and any order made by the Courts in relation to any such decree shall, if the proceedings were commenced before the passing of the Act, be valid in all respects as though the parties to the marriage had been domiciled in India. This Act, however, does not touch the question of jurisdiction in cases instituted subsequent to the passing of the Act.

In Lee v. Lee, 5 Lahore 147, the High Court of Lahore was invited to determine whether mere residence within the forum confers jurisdiction upon the Indian Courts to grant a decree for the dissolution of a marriage between persons who are not domiciled in India. The matter is one of very great importance to European British subjects residing in India and a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court sat to consider it. The question arose whether in enacting the Indian Divorce Act the Indian Legislature exceeded the authority conferred upon it by the British Parliament. The scope of the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council was considered by the Lords of the Judicial Committee in Empress v. Burah, 4 Cal. 172, as far back as 1878. In delivering the judgment of the Privy Council Lord Selbourne made the following pertinent observations:—
“The Indian Legislature has powers expressly limited by the Act of Parliament which created it and it can do nothing beyond the limits which circumscribed those powers. But when acting within these limits it is not in any sense an agent or delegate of the Imperial Parliament but has and was intended to have plenary powers of legislation as large and of the same nature as those of the Parliament itself. The established Courts of justice, when a question arises whether the prescribed limits have been exceeded, must of necessity determine that question and the only way in which they can properly do so is by looking to the terms of the instrument by which affirmatively the legislative powers were created and by which negatively they are restricted. If what has been done is legislation within the general scope of the affirmative words which give the power and if it violates no express condition or restriction by which that power is limited it is not for any Court of justice to inquire further or to enlarge constructively those conditions and restrictions." The Full Bench held that under the Indian Councils Act, 1861 the Indian Legislature had power to confer on Indian Courts the jurisdiction contemplated by the Indian Divorce Act, which falls within the ambit of the affirmative words of sec. 92 of the Indian Councils Act, whereby the Governor-General in Council is vested with plenary powers to make laws, of every description, it being immaterial whether the laws so made do or do not affect the status of non-domiciled British subjects. It was held that under the Indian Divorce Act bonâ fide residence in India confers jurisdiction upon the Indian Courts to grant a decree for the dissolution of a marriage between parties who are not domiciled in India.

We publish in another column a communication by a member of the Provincial Judicial Service who appears to feel that, in cases of obstruction to execution offered by contumacious judgment-debtors, the remedy provided by the power given to the Court to complain under sec. 195 or sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is not sufficiently effective and that the power given by sec. 74, C. P. C., to send the obstructor to civil prison is illusory. We do not see our way to agree with his view and fail to see why these remedies should be put aside as of no account whatever. We cannot assent to Civil Courts being clothed with additional powers summary or otherwise for bringing this class of offenders to justice unless and until the powers now possessed are resorted to and demonstrated to be ineffective. Further, we have the strongest objection to his proposal to extend the power given to Courts by sec. 480, Cr. P. C., to punish contempts committed in facie curiæ to cases of contumacy occurring beyond the ken of the judicial officer—cases which must depend for proof upon evidence adduced in Court. On the other hand, we consider it highly undesirable that these cases should be tried, even by non-summary procedure, by the very judicial officer whose orders the judgment-debtor is alleged to have disobeyed or obstructed—as such officers would be naturally inclined to take too severe a view of contempt of their own authority and would be subject to a natural bias against persons accused of something akin to lesé majesté against their own authority. This is not to say that there are not obstructive litigants who may prove too much for the Court, their opponents and even the law itself. Such people, like the poor, are always with us. But because this is so, we are not prepared to recommend that they should therefore be all declared outlaws and handed over for summary punishment by officers whose authority they are charged with having treated with contempt. We may mention that the County Courts in England are not entitled to punish any person for contempt not committed in facie curiæ and it is only Courts of Record which may punish any disobedience of its orders summarily. But the superior Courts are very reluctant to exercise such powers in any but exceptional cases.

SCOPE OF SEC. 182 OF THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT.

BY ASHUTOSH GONGOPADHYA, M.A., B.L.

Now, what is the material difference between these two views? According to the first view, as the lease is an agricultural one, Bengal Tenancy Act will apply to the homestead together with the other arable lands forming one complete under-raiyyoti tenancy apart from sec. 182. According to the second view as the raiyyot satisfies all the conditions required by sec. 182, subject to local custom or usage, Bengal Tenancy Act will apply. So far there is no difference. But according to the first view the result of the application of the Bengal Tenancy Act is that A, in the given example, will be an under-raiyyot under the Act, and the provisions of Chap. VII of the Act will regulate the incidents of the whole tenancy comprised of the homestead and other arable lands. And according to the second view, not only Bengal Tenancy Act will apply, but something more, viz., the provisions that regulate the tenancy of a raiyyot under the Act will also govern the homestead; and the result will be that if A, in the given case, happens to be an occupancy raiyyot with regard to his raiyyoti lands he will acquire occupancy right in the homestead also, though under the lease he may have only the interest of an under-raiyyot. The conditions under which the rent of the homestead will be enhanced will be the same as that applicable to a raiyyot, he will be ejected only under the conditions under which an occupancy raiyyot may be ejected.

According to the first view the section is applicable only when the raiyyot holds the homestead singly, and the section does not apply if the homestead is a part of a holding whether raiyyoti or under-raiyyoti.

According to the second view the section applies even when the homestead is held by a raiyyot as a part of an agricultural holding provided the agricultural holding is not a raiyyoti holding, i.e., the section will apply to all homesteads held singly or jointly with agricultural lands, save and except to cases where the homestead is a part of the raiyyot's raiyyoti holding.

In order to support the first view we shall have to read into the section words that are not there. The section undoubtedly imports that it will not apply when the homestead is held as a part of the holding as a raiyyot. The words "part of the holding as a raiyyot" are very significant. Their meaning emerges from all doubts when we read them in contra-distinction with the words "as a part of the holding of an under-raiyyot." The section speaks of the holding of a raiyyot and not of an under-raiyyot. If the section, as it stands, does not bear the interpretation, why should we import into it words that are not there only to come to a specific conclusion?

It may be said that there cannot be a thing like the "holding of an under-raiyyot." The term "holding," though apparently limited by the definition (sec. 3, cl. 9) to a parcel or parcels of land held by raiyyot, has been indiscriminately used in the Act to refer to lands held by raiyyots as well as under-raiyyots. This is clear from the terms of the sec. 113 and sec. 121 of the Act where the "holding of an under-raiyyot" is referred to together with the "holding of a raiyyot." Thus we find that the general scheme of the Act allows the use of the phrase "holding of an under-raiyyot." If that is so, the conclusion is safe that the legislature purposely used the phrase "otherwise than as a part of a holding as a raiyyot," in order to exclude "the holding of an under-raiyyot" from the list of disqualifying conditions which would be a bar to the application of the section.

Another and a stronger argument of the supporters of the first view is that where the homestead is a part of an agricultural holding provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act will apply apart from sec. 182 because the lease is an agricultural lease. Apparently the argument, as it stands, commands considerable force. But one important thing is overlooked, namely, the main purpose of sec. 182. As we have already said, the section finds its place in the Act to confer some special and peculiar advantages to the homestead of a raiyyot. Those advantages do not simply mean the application of the general provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act to homesteads. The intention of the legislature clearly is to apply the provisions applicable to the raiyyoti holdings to the homesteads under the conditions specified in sec. 182, which certainly means much more than mere application of the ordinary provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A homestead is yet a homestead though held as a part of an agricultural holding. Once we accept the proposition that the section is enacted for the protection of a raiyyot, the conclusion seems to be inevitable that the section is applicable to all homesteads whether held singly or as a part of other agricultural lands provided other conditions postulated by the section are satisfied. That a liberal and very wide interpretation of the section is desirable is also supported by case-law on the section (Vide 50 I. C. 8).

Of course, it may be said that such an interpretation of sec. 182 would result in great anomalies; if the temporary tenant of a homestead acquires occupancy right by virtue of this section, it may so happen that such tenant would acquire thereby greater rights than those of his superior landlord; if the section is given effect to even when the homestead is held with arable lands, then the raiyyot may acquire occupancy right with regard to the homestead only, though he may be ejected from the agricultural portion of the tenancy, and in that case difficulties will arise regarding apportionment of rents. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court were also conscious of some of the above difficulties in 19 C. W. N. 914 which was a case of pure homestead only, but, for all that, they did not fail to give effect to the section. The rights mentioned in the section are special rights given to the raiyyot by a special provision for special reasons. So it is useless to cry over the fact that they are not always logical. When we find that the provisions were made for the protection of the raiyyot, that the status is given by law and not by act of parties, then we can be easily reconciled to the results however anomalous they may seem to be.

In interpreting the section Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur has commented on those rulings which hold that the section is applicable even when the raiyyot holds his raiyyoti holding and his homestead tenancy under different landlords. According to the above authority, the words "landlord" and "raiyyot" are relative terms, and therefore when the section provides "where a raiyyot holds his homestead," it means, "where a raiyyot holds his homestead under the landlord whose raiyyot he is." According to him the section should be made applicable only in those cases where the raiyyoti holding and the homestead are held under the same landlord. With all respect to that great authority, it is submitted that there is no reason why we should alter the plain meaning of the section by introducing into it extraneous words which are warranted neither by the recognised principle for interpretation of a statute nor by the purpose of the section.

PRESENTATION OF DEEDS FOR REGISTRATION BY MINORS.

By SARADA CHARAN GHOSE.

The points which I propose to discuss are, firstly, whether a document presented by a minor claimant is a valid presentation under the Registration Act, and secondly, whether an application under sec. 73 of the Registration Act can be presented by him for registration.

In order to fully appreciate the importance of these two points, I shall strictly confine myself to the Registration Act which alone should be our guide. In the Registration Acts (Act III of 1877, and Act XVI of 1908) the word "minor" means a person who according to the personal law to which he is subject has not attained majority.

When the definition of the word minor already appears in Act IX of 1875—The Indian Majority Act—what reason could there be for giving a new definition in the Registration Acts passed subsequently in the year 1877 if the legislature had not intended to put a new construction upon the word minor for registration purposes? The Government of India (Home Department) by its notification numbered 535, dated 16th April 1897, declared that for the purposes of the Registration Act all persons domiciled in India being British subjects of whatever race or religion are to be considered minors until they have reached the full age of 18 years. So the position created by the above definition was qualified by the above notification of 1897. In other Acts such as the Probate and Administration Act—Act V of 1881—we find that the definition of minor is made to depend on the Indian Majority Act. But when the Registration Act was re-cast in the year 1908, the amending form of the above notification was not, however, accepted. The word minor was defined independently of Act IX of 1875 or of the above notification of 1897 and the definition appears in its original form showing thereby that the legislature did not intend to follow the notification. Then the inference is irresistible that for registration purposes a minor is as contemplated by the Registration Act—Act XVI of 1908 which is a special Code complete in itself (Vide 18 Mad. p. 99). Moreover each Act is to follow its own definition otherwise there would be no justification for adding definitions in an Act (Vide 4 Cal. p. 665).

Now according to the personal law of the Hindus and the Mahomedans, a minor attains majority on his completion of the fifteenth and sixteenth years respectively (Vide Trevelyan on Minors, p. 1). Therefore for registration purposes a Hindu or a Mahomedan attains majority on the completion of the fifteenth and sixteenth years respectively (Vide Rustomji's Registration Act, p. 21).

In sec. 32 of the Registration Act it is exhaustively stated by whom a document can be presented for registration. The section states that a document can be presented for registration by some person (a) executing or claiming under the same or (b) by the representative or assign of such person or (c) by the agent of such person, representative or assign duly appointed by an authenticated power of attorney. It is now necessary to know the meaning of the word "person" so that it might be ascertained what kind or class of persons is contemplated by the Registration Act. The word in its wider signification includes any human being even a juristic person (Vide Holland's Jurisprudence). But this need not trouble us as being foreign to our present purpose. In the definition of the word "minor" as given in the Registration Act we see that a minor means a person. Therefore the word person includes a minor. Therefore a minor executant or a minor claimant can present a document for registration under sec. 32 of the Registration Act, Act XVI of 1908. Also in cl. (b) of sec. 32, the word representative occurs which includes a guardian either of a minor executant or claimant. The use of the word "or" in "or by the representative or assign" is rather significant and contemplates two distinct cases. The cl. (a) of sec. 32 is quite general in its use; no limitation has been put upon the word "person" which may mean either a major or a minor. Therefore a major executant or a major claimant can present a document for registration. Also a minor executant or a minor claimant can present a document for registration. But of those minors who have their guardians already appointed they may under cl. (b) of sec. 32 present document for registration either themselves or through their guardians. This is what I understand by the use of the word "or" before cl. (b) of sec. 32.

There is no denying of the fact that a minor can be a recipient under an instrument of gift (Vide sec. 127 of Transfer of Property Act) or will. He can also be a mortgagee. That being so it requires no further authority nor any elaborate reasoning to support the contention that the word person as used in sec. 32 includes a minor. But sec. 35 of the said Act lays down that registration shall be refused if the executant appears to be minor, etc. In Act XX of 1871, we do not find this clause. Sec. 35 does not say that when the executant is a minor, etc., the document cannot be presented by him, neither is there any restriction on the part of the registering officer to accept it for the purpose of registration. But secs. 20, 21, 23 and 26 of the Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908) lay down that in cases of non-compliance with the provisions of those sections the document shall not even be accepted for registration. This difference in wording in secs. 35 and 20, 21, 23 and 26 is very significant. Therefore it comes to this that a presentation of a document can be made by a minor under sec. 32 of the said Act and the document can be accepted by the registering officer but if the executant appears to be minor, etc., the registering officer shall refuse registration (Vide Banerjee—Registration Act, p. 293). Moreover as the registering officer is not a Court, its duties in the main being administrative (Vide 15 I. C. p. 652 F. B.), the act of presentation is merely a physical act of handing over the document for registration (Vide Rustomji's Registration Act, p. 163). It can therefore be done by those who are physically capable of doing so. This is also clear if we turn to sec. 36 of the Registration Act which lays down: "If any person presenting any document for registration or claiming under any document which is capable of being so presented. . . . Here in case of a claimant it is said that if the document is capable of being presented, it can be presented by such claimant. Whether the claimant has any such capacity to present the document for the purpose of registration is not at all mentioned. In secs. 40 and 41 in cases of will and authority to adopt, the testator himself or after his death, any person claiming as executor or otherwise under a will or the donor himself or after his death, the donee of any authority to adopt or the adoptive son may present to any Registrar or Sub-Registrar for registration. In these two sections no mention has been made of any agent or representative. Would it not be fair to suppose that the legislature did contemplate a distinction between a minor executant and a minor claimant? Thus it is clear that no legal disability can be ascribed to the act of presentation by any person in the absence of any provision of law. That is, presentation can be made by all except those to whom that right is specifically denied by the legislature. I have shown that sec. 32 imposes no bar to minors as such to invite the registering officer to initiate registration of documents presented by them. But sec. 35 seems to exclude the executants who appear to be minors, etc. Therefore the probable inference would be that the legislature gives sanction to minor claimants to present documents for registration (Vide 33 I. C. p. 33). When A and B both can present documents for registration which is expressly refused in case of A, the intention of the legislature must necessarily be that registration shall not be refused in case of B provided other requirements of the Registration Act have been complied with. From a negative we may come to an affirmative rule. Even if the registering officer registers a document in contravention of sec. 35 or other similar provisions it would not necessarily be null and void. Such errors or defects are "defects in procedure" (Vide 24 W. R. 75 P. C.). The law nowhere lays down that registration of a document, execution of which is admitted by a minor, is ipso facto void as against such minor or void for want of jurisdiction on the part of the registering officer (Vide 21 Cal. p. 872). If that be the intention of law with regard to minor executants for which the section is express we can easily guess the meaning of the intentional silence of the legislature with regard to minor claimants. Therefore when a minor executant or a minor claimant presents a document for registration, there is nothing in the Registration Act to oust the jurisdiction of the registering officer to accept it for the purpose of registration.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Jan. 15th, 1925.—The Hilary Sittings of the Privy Council will commence on the 20th January 1925 and the list contains one Australian, four Canadian and two Crown Colony Appeals, the latter being from the Straits Settlements.

The Indian list is a long one containing 24 appeals, five from Madras and three each from Bombay, Lahore, Bengal, Patna and Allahabad, two from Central Provinces and one each from the Punjab and Lower Burma. There are only three Indian Appeals in which judgment was not delivered during the past term.

An interesting case was recently decided by the Privy Council on appeal from Egypt, in Bartlett & Bartlett. A testator, a Mahomedan British subject, domiciled in Egypt, died in 1918 leaving his mother him surviving. She died in 1919 leaving two sons who were the Defendants in the action. The testator prior to his death made a Will in which he appointed his brothers his executors and left his property to his widow and children. The Plaintiffs in the action were his surviving children and they claimed that only the beneficiaries named in the Will were entitled to the testator's estate and sought a declaration that the Appellants had no beneficiary interest. The Appellants counter-claimed that by the Moslem law of inheritance the mother of the deceased testator who survived him was entitled to 1/6th of the estate in spite of any testamentary disposition. They maintained that the testator could not dispose by his Will of his mother's heritable share and that pro tanto the Will was inoperative. The Egyptian Courts were of opinion that a British subject who would otherwise be bound by Moslem law can at his option invest himself with a wider disposing power than the Moslem law gives him by making a Will in conformity with the Wills Act, 1837, but the Privy Council decided that the provisions of the Egyptian Mixed Civil Code provided that the law applicable should be the principles of English law "as far as the circumstances admit" with a proviso in the nature of an exception similar to the rules established in British India that Moslems and Hindus shall enjoy and be bound by the law of their communities in matters such as the present. They held accordingly that the mother's right was preserved and placed beyond the reach of the testamentary disposition which her son purported to make.

Jan. 22nd.—The Privy Council commenced their sittings on January 20th and the following members were present:—LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE, President, LORD CARSON, LORD BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI.

An application was made by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Hyam for special leave to appeal from a decree of the Oudh Court in Md. Sher Khan v. Mt. Kamalunissa. The value of the subject-matter was over Rs. 10,000 but the Appellate Court confirmed the decision of the trial Court on the ground that there was no question of law of general importance involved.

The applicant contended that the decisions turned on the construction of a document which involved an important question of Mahomedan law and that inasmuch as the value of the subject-matter of the suit satisfied the provisions there was an appeal as of right whether the question of law was or was not of general importance. Leave was refused.

Jan. 20th and 22nd.—The first appeal to be heard was Adappa v. Gundappa (Bombay). The claim was for possession of certain immoveable property and arrears of rent under the terms of a rent note and possession was also claimed under a mortgage. The defence which had been negatived by the Indian Courts was that the rent note was the consequence of the mortgage and that the mortgage was fictitious and without consideration.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

The argument for the Appellants has not yet concluded.

RESISTANCE TO EXECUTION AND A PLEA FOR EXTENSION OF COURT'S SUM- MARY POWER TO PUNISH CON- TEMPT.

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir,

Resistance to execution of decrees of Civil Courts is a matter of not infrequent occurrence in the mufasil and, in certain parts of Bengal, it is a positive scandal. Instances are not unknown of serious criminal cases arising out of resistance to seizure of moveables or delivery of possession in execution. The fact that no immediate risk of punishment is incurred by such resistance, as the Court concerned cannot take cognisance of the offence, seems, to a certain extent, to encourage the idea of such resistance in a defeated litigant, who naturally desires to put off execution as long as possible. The Code of Civil Procedure, no doubt, gives him all possible opportunities of delaying execution, if he is so inclined, but the worst of all manoeuvres is to take the law into his own hands. It is not only productive of the law's proverbial delay, so much regretted in these days of expedition and economy, but is also a serious handicap in the administration of justice. The present procedure is to draw up a formal complaint in writing under sec. 195 or 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and send it to a Magistrate for trial. But those who are intimately connected with the working of the law, in this respect, will perhaps agree that this procedure does not always satisfactorily meet the exigencies of the situation. Instances have been found of obstruction to Court officers more than once in course of the same execution proceeding. How often can a Court of law make complaints in writing against a litigant before it? How long are its hands to be stayed by mere criminal force in securing to a litigant the legitimate fruits of a decree in his favour? What consolation would it be to a litigant to be told, "Here is a solemn declaration of your victory in the litigation, but nothing can be done to put you in enjoyment of it against your fighting adversary?"

In spite of the provisions of secs. 195 and 476, Criminal Procedure Code, a civil Court can, under sec. 490 of the same Code, take cognisance of certain offences affecting administration of justice and punish the offender when the offence is committed in the view or the presence of such Court. It is unfortunate that sec. 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code, which deal with contempt of lawful authority of public servants and cover cases of obstruction to execution of decrees, are not mentioned in sec. 480, Criminal Procedure Code, nor can such obstruction be brought under the wording of sec. 188, Indian Penal Code. The offences mentioned in secs. 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code, evidently affect the administration of justice, which includes not only adjudication of the rights of contending litigants but also securing to them the fruits of that adjudication. Resistance to seizure of property or obstruction to delivery of possession in execution would no less paralyse the work of the Court than the refusal of a person to produce a document (sec. 175, Indian Penal Code) or to take oath (sec. 178) or to answer a question (sec. 179) or to sign a statement (sec. 189) when so required by a lawful authority. Sec. 480, Criminal Procedure Code, empowers a civil Court to punish the latter offences but not the former.

It is true, sec. 480 comes into operation only when the offence is committed in the view or the presence of the Court. Perhaps the view of mufasil Courts is not long enough to cover the acts of their own officers sent out to execute their own orders, not to speak of their presence in places where their officers are engaged in their official duties. No interruption is a contempt of their lawful authority which is not offered in facie curiæ, under their very nose. However a slight amendment of sec. 480 so as to extend its operation to offences under secs. 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code, is expected to afford a considerable check to defiance of civil processes by defeated litigants and others, but for which the Civil Court's power of execution would, in certain cases, seem to me entirely ineffective. The power of detaining the obstructor in civil prison at the instance and cost of the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser, given to civil Courts by sec. 74 of the Civil Procedure Code, appears to be illusory, for the person who can resist seizure of his property under orders of Court can equally resist a warrant of civil arrest and drive the Court to make a complaint to a Magistrate under sec. 195 or 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and defeat or at least delay execution of the decree.

As the question strikes at the root of the authority and efficiency of civil Courts, it deserves the attention of the Legislature in any scheme of revision of the law that the shortly expected report of the Civil Justice Committee may necessitate.

Yours truly,
DWIJENDRA NATH PAL,
Munsif.

The Magna Carta, Art. 39, if guarantees trial by jury and personal liberty.

Mr. Walter Clark of Raleigh (N. C.) contributes a very interesting article in the American Law Review on the Magna Carta and Trial by Jury. The learned writer referring to the result of researches made by the historical study of English law during the present and the latter part of the last century, both in England and America, shows that the views of Coke and Blackstone that jury trial was granted or guaranteed by the Magna Carta is without any foundation. We shall briefly quote the authorities on which he relies. It will appear from these quotations that the claim that an Englishman usually puts forward that his right to be tried by a jury of his own countrymen is guaranteed by the Magna Carta has no foundation in fact. The Magna Carta in this respect conferred no rights on the Englishmen at large but only a special privilege to the Barons and Bishops for trial by their peers. However, the one thing that the Magna Carta guaranteed and for which it is rightly recognised as the greatest Charter of Liberty known to history, and of which the English people may feel justly proud, is that the Charter for the first time formulated the legal and constitutional doctrine that there shall be no "condemnation without trial." The personal liberty of the citizen in all constitutional countries may be said to rest on this "rule of law." It grieves us, therefore, very much to find Englishmen at the helm of affairs in India violating this doctrine. We are sure the following extracts from the article will be found instructive and interesting:—

McKechnie on Magna Carta, p. 158, speaking of the traditional relation of Magna Carta to trial by jury says: "One persistent error, universally adopted for many centuries, and even now hard to dispel, is that the Great Charter granted or guaranteed trial by jury. This belief, however, which has endured so long and played so prominent a part in political theory, is now held by all competent authorities to be entirely unfounded.

The barons in their combination against King John were not only anxious to protect themselves against the arbitrary power of the king, but to fence off and prohibit the jurisdiction of the common law Courts of the kingdom as to themselves, and hence arose the much misunderstood expression in Magna Carta that they should be tried solely by the judgment (not a jury) of their peers. The king's judges were appointed and removable by him at will. They were not the peers (i.e., the equals) of the barons and they wished to guarantee, therefore, that when the king assumed any cause of complaint against them they should be tried not by judges appointed by the king, but should be investigated and judgment rendered by their own associates and they should be under the jurisdiction of judicium parium, that is, they were entitled to demand the judgment of their peers.

Magna Carta was a contract between King John and thirteen barons and twelve bishops made at Runnymede, three miles below Windsor Castle on the Thames, on Friday, the 19th June 1215. The object of this contract was to restrict the power of King John and for the protection of the feudal privileges of the bishops and barons who had been pillaged and oppressed by the king through his judges who were appointed and removable at will by him, and who, of course, did his bidding without scruple.

The language of Chap 39 of Magna Carta, which, like all legal instruments of that day and for hundreds of years later, was written in Latin, is as follows: "Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur, aut disseisiatur, aut utlagetur, aut exuletur, aut aliquo modo destruat, nec super eum ibimus, nec super eum mittemus, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum vel per legem terre." It has been translated as follows: "No freeman shall be arrested, or detained in prison, or deprived of his freehold, or outlawed, or banished, or in any way molested; and we will not set forth against him, nor send against him, unless by the lawful judgment of his peers and by the law of the land."

"It has been usual to read it as containing a guarantee of trial by jury to all England; as abolutely prohibiting arbitrary commitment; and as undertaking solemnly to dispense to all and sundry equal and exact justice, full, free and speedy. The traditional interpretation has thus made it, in the widest terms, a promise of law and liberty, and good government to every one. A careful analysis of the words of the clause, read in connection with its historical genesis, suggests the need for modification of this view. It was in accord with the practical genius of this great document that it should direct its energies, not to the enunciation of vague platitudes and well-sounding generalities, but to the reform of a specific and clearly defined group of abuses. Its main object was to prohibit John from resorting to what is sometimes whimsically known in Scotland as 'Jeddart justice.' It forbade him for the future to place execution before judgment.

"Second, it required 'per judicium parium,' i.e., that the judgment must be rendered by one's peers. This was a stipulation that while the king might dispense justice to the common people through his judges, as to proceedings against the barons, the judgment should be rendered only by their peers. The king's judges were not peers of the barons and therefore this much-misunderstood stipulation was a contract for their protection that they should be tried, both civilly and criminally, by their peers and not by the king's judges. A fragment of this provision still remains in the English law by which peers of the realm are tried in certain cases on the criminal side of the docket by the House of Lords. Therefore, instead of being, as so often construed, a guarantee for a trial by jury, it was a stipulation for the special privilege that in matters affecting the barons they were to be tried by men of their own order. It was a stipulation for a special privilege and not a guarantee of equality. Another instance of this stipulation was that for centuries under John's Charter, the 10th April 1201, in all actions against Jews, they were entitled to 'judicium parium' by Jews, and by later statutes a foreign merchant was entitled to a jury, half of whom should be alien to his own country—de mediocriter lingua. In the case of a proceeding against a Welshman, he was entitled to a trial by men drawn equally from both sides of the boundary line between Wales and England."

The third provision, that the trial should be 'per legem terrae,' i.e., by the "law of the land," meant not as is now generally understood, but it meant trial by battle or ordeal or compurgators. No other method of trial was known. This stipulation of Magna Carta promised that no plea, civil or criminal, could henceforth be decided against any freeman until he had failed to claim or had waived his right to a trial by one of those methods.

The scope of the protection afforded, that he should not be taken nor imprisoned, did not mean literally that he could not be provisionally arrested and detained but merely that he was entitled to a trial before condemnation.

The barons intended to prevent the arbitrary arrests to which they had been subjected by an arbitrary king. The words that the king "will not set forth nor send against him" were also clearly intended for the purpose of preventing attacks by forces in arms against men unjudged and uncondemned.

The main cause of the misconstruction of this section is the use of the words "No freeman should be molested in ways above made illegal." But it is very clear from a history of the times and from the conditions of society that the word "freeman," which is the translation given to the term liber homo, applied only to owners of a knight's fee. It included in the protection neither the property nor the persons of villeins or those holding unfree lands. The whole subject is so fully discussed in McKechnie on Magna Carta, pp. 435-439, and in other treatises upon the history of the early English law, that it is not necessary to say more.

In the most recent and one of the most valuable works on the common law, Holdsworth's History of the English Law, vol. 1, p. 59, it is said: "It is also clear that the words judicium parium do not refer to trial by jury. A trial by royal judge and a body of recognitors who found the facts was exactly what the barons did not want. What they did want was firstly a tribunal of the old type in which all the suitors were judges both of law and fact, and, secondly, a tribunal in which they would not be judged by their inferiors. Some of them did not consider that the royal judges, and none of them would have considered that the body of recognitors, were their peers. It is in this respect that the thirty-ninth section of Magna Carta is reactionary." Holdsworth further says that the words "by the law of the land" referred only to the previous mode of trial by battle, ordeal or compurgation; that is, the barons were seeking for a trial for themselves by their peers, that is, by other barons: and, on p. 84 of the same volume, he says: "There is no historical justification for the identification of trial by jury with the judgment of their peers." Indeed, Lesser says, quoting MacLachlan Esq. Cve., 326, that "until about the reign of Henry VI (1442-1461) trial by jury to all intents and purposes was a trial by witnesses."

PRESENTATION OF DEEDS FOR REGISTRATION BY MINORS

By PASHUPATI NATH CHAKRAVARTI, M.A., B.L.

Acceptance does not mean that the document so accepted shall as a matter of course be registered. The registering officer can accept a document under certain sections of the Act and when he is satisfied that other provisions of the Act have been complied with he must register it. Although he has accepted the document he can refuse registration when requirements of the Act have not been fulfilled. But the case would be different when the document is presented for registration by an unauthorised person. Here the registering officer has no jurisdiction to accept it because the power of jurisdiction of the registering officer comes into play only when he is invoked by some person having a direct relation to the deed. It is for these persons to consider whether they will or will not give to the deed the efficacy by registration. The registering officer could not be held to exercise the jurisdiction conferred on him if hearing of the execution of the deed he got possession of it and registered it and the same objection applies to his proceedings at the instigation of a third party who might be a busy body (vide 5 C. W. N. p. 177, P. C.). Thus we see that in case of presentation by an unauthorised person, the registering officer has no jurisdiction at all, but in case of a minor executant or a minor claimant having a direct relation to the deed the registering officer cannot be said to have no jurisdiction to accept it (see however sec. 23A of the Registration Act—Act XV of 1917—Irregular presentation validated by registration). It then might be argued that a lunatic or an idiot can also present a document for the purpose of registration. Is there any bar in the Registration Act that they cannot do so? But would that be physically possible for them to present a document in the proper office within the proper time and also to proper officer? Then again, can a lunatic or idiot be said to have any discretion or judgment that can be found in a minor? If an idiot or lunatic can be said to have discretion or lucidity are they any longer idiot or lunatic?

But the consideration of our case has been made difficult by the explanatory notes appended by the Inspector-General of Registration under sec. 32 of the Registration Manual, 1918, Part I, which is described as the Indian Registration Act—Act XVI of 1908 with annotations of sections. By that annotation the Inspector-General means to say that as the minor belongs to the category of a lunatic or idiot and as a lunatic or idiot cannot present a document for the purpose of registration, the minor claimant also will not be eligible for doing the same thing. But where is the bar to a lunatic or an idiot presenting a document for the purpose of registration? Their cases must not be prejudiced by extraneous consideration, i.e., by importing into the Registration Act principles of other laws.

Because the word minor occurs in the same sentence which contains the words lunatic and idiot, it cannot be said that they all are of one and the same type for all purposes and at all times. What is there to suggest that the disability or the capacity of a minor is on a line with that of an idiot or lunatic. If it be conceded for the sake of argument that the disability of a minor for some purposes falls in a line with that of an idiot or lunatic, it cannot be said that the capacity of a minor is also on the same line. It would be a great insult to our imagination if we want to link the minor in the same chain with an idiot or lunatic. Under the Guardians and Wards Act (Act VIII of 1890) when a minor can form an intelligent preference as to who should be his guardian, the Court may give effect to his wish (vide sec. 17 (3)). A minor may be appointed a guardian of his minor wife or other minor members when he is the managing member of the family—mark the word “managing.” A minor may be appointed an executor of a Will while a lunatic or idiot cannot (vide Majumdar's Hindu Wills Act). A minor can sue or be sued in a Criminal Court. In England a distinction is being made between an infant and a minor and a minor can act in Admiralty Divorce or Probate Cases. In the case of an infant a guardian is assigned by the Court but a minor may elect his own guardian (vide Hals., Vol. 17, p. 500). Idiots and lunatics under the Hindu law are regarded as disqualified persons and are incapable of inheriting or holding any property or estate (vide J. Bhattacharyee's Hindu Law, p. 349, 2nd Edition). Under the Presidency Small Cause Court Act (Act XV of 1882) a minor can act (vide sec. 32). It has been held in England that there are several acts which can be done only by infants and not by their guardians (vide Simpson on Infants, p. 34, Farewell on Powers, 3rd Edition, p. 133, In re S. S. B. (1906) 1 Ch. 712]. From the above it is clear that disability of a minor cannot be deduced as a general principle. In spite of his having disability under certain circumstances, a minor has got some capacity.

It is now necessary to say some words with regard to the explanation given by the Inspector-General of Registration. In order that the explanation given by him may be binding it must find a place in the body of rules which are required to be made by him under sec. 69 of the Registration Act. Before a rule made by the Inspector-General acquires the force of law, it must be submitted to the local Government for its approval and the necessary sanction having been obtained it must be published in the Official Gazette (vide sec. 69; 35 I. C. p. 718). The said rule must also be consistent with the Act (vide sec. 69; 16 W. R. p. 182). The Inspector-General in his annotations confesses that the case of a minor claimant is neither contemplated nor sanctioned by the Registration Act. That being so, can it be maintained for a moment that the annotations he had appended under sec. 32 are consistent with the Registration Act? When it is neither contemplated nor sanctioned can he contemplate and sanction on behalf of the legislature and create a law which is quite foreign to the Act itself? Even the Judicial Committee refuses to legislate in the name of interpretation and highly condemns the practice of engrafting new law under the guise of interpretation of existing law. The Rt. Hon'ble Montague Smith says in L. R. 1 I. Ap. 167 :—"It is impossible that any Court can add to the statute that which the legislature has not done. . . . This Act (meaning the Limitation Act) contains no such saving and their Lordships would be legislating and not interpreting the statute if they were to introduce it."

But there is a dictum of Justice Muthusamy Ayyar which appears in I. L. R. 18 Mad. 109. The points for determination in that case were whether sec. 7 of the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877) is applicable to the Indian Registration Act (Act III of 1877) and whether the said Registration Act is a complete code in itself and the decision was that the Registration Act being a special Act complete in itself, the provisions of sec. 7 of the Limitation Act do not apply. Thus we see that the dictum is quite uncalled for and was not at all required for the decision of that case. The passage runs thus :—"Sec. 32 provides that every document must be presented for registration by some person executing or claiming under the instrument or by the representative or assign of such person or by the agent of such person. The section does not apparently contemplate the case of disability and does not make a special provision in regard to it and the probable inference is that when a document is executed in favour of a minor his legal guardian is taken to represent him for the purpose of registering it." Even the learned Judge admits then that the section does not apparently contemplate and make special provision for a minor claimant while the Act does so for a minor executant. The Act is as I understand intentionally silent on this point and what the effect of this silence is, I have shown before. Can any Court add to the word of the statute and give a new complexion to the section? Then there is the latest pronouncement by the Burma Chief Court reported in 33 I. C. p. 33. That case was decided in the year 1916 and it was held that there is no bar imposed by the Registration Act to presenting a document for registration by a minor claimant. That was the state of law just before the legislature had amended the Registration Act (Act XV of 1917). In connection with the above, the passage in the judgment of Justice Mookerjee reported in 24 C. W. N. p. 14, may be re-called with profit—"It is a well-established principle of construction that the legislature is presumed to know not only the general principles of law but also the construction which the Courts have put upon particular statutes and therefore where a section of an Act which has received a judicial construction is re-enacted in the same words such re-enactment must be treated as legislative recognition of that construction." Since the decision of the case reported in 33 I. C. p. 33, the Registration Act has been amended (Act XV of 1917) but the legislature has introduced no alteration with a view to nullify the effect of the decision in question, the conclusion is irresistible that the legislature meant to accept the correctness of that decision. The legislature knows what the law is and has the power to alter the phraseology if it transpires that its true intention has not been given effect to in judicial decision; the absence of such actions on the part of the legislature may well be taken to indicate that the Court has rightly ascertained its intention specially if in the interval the statute has been amended in other respect. From all I have said above the natural conclusion would be that a minor claimant can make a valid presentation of a document executed in his favour. This much disposes of the first point.

Lord Birkenhead on Fusion and Costs.

In the Law Journal of the 24th January last, there is an editorial note on Lord Birkenhead's article on "Fusion." It recommends for the consideration of the Bar Council the question whether the time is not come when Barristers should be permitted to have direct access to the lay public, in advising them on matters of law. The article points out and indeed, very pertinently, that public welfare could not suffer thereby. In fact such access would be a distinct advantage to the public. Under the present state of things, if a lay client desires Counsel's opinion, he has to pay two lawyers' fees for it. But if the Barristers are allowed to advise direct, hold consultation with the client, the advice could be obtained for one fee.

Now that our High Court has enrolled vakils and attorneys as advocates it is not reasonable that such barriers should be maintained. It may further be urged that barristers and advocates may be allowed to act if they so choose to do. This is a matter which deserves serious consideration. When in England where people are so much more better off, this question is receiving attention of the profession and the public for reasons of economy, how all the more needful it is in this country to consider the question of reducing the cost of litigation. This is all the more so, when a barrister of ex-Lord Chancellor Birkenhead's eminence has directed his attention to the matter and instead of condemning the idea of "fusion" he seems to be of opinion that within certain limits, the fusion may be allowed. His Lordship has in the issue of the Law Journal received last week contributed another article on "Costs" in which he pleads for the establishing of more uniformity in this respect in all Courts than exists at present. He is, however, careful in not treading on vested interests. But no such obstacle exists with regard to the reduction of costs of litigation in this country and any reform in this direction would be greatly appreciated. Let not professional etiquette or the vested interests of a very limited number stand in the way of a much-needed reform in this direction.

High Court's revisional powers wider than appellate powers.

We have from time to time pointed out that the revisional powers of the High Court are very wide. It is noteworthy that these powers are wider in scope than appellate powers. The arm of the High Court is long enough to reach any kind of wrong done by the Courts subordinate thereto. Apart from sec. 107 of the Government of India Act, sec. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure clothes the High Court with sufficient powers of interference. As far back as 1894 the question arose whether the High Court could interfere in proceedings pending in the lower Court and quash them at any stage (Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman, I. L. R. 22 Cal. 131). The case was argued before Petheram, C. J. and Beverley, J. and both parties were very strongly represented, Mr. Jackson appearing in support of the rule and Mr. Pugh on the other side. The Petitioner Chandi Pershad applied to the Municipal Commissioners of Monghyr for a license for two carriages and six ponies which was granted but his statement was sent for verification to the Overseer of the Municipality who reported that Chandi Pershad had eight ponies and one horse. Thereupon the Chairman of the Municipality directed the prosecution of Chandi Pershad for making a false statement regarding the number of animals. On the following day Chandi Pershad offered to pay the tax on the other three animals but pleaded that he did not think he was liable to take out a license for them as they were old and diseased and unfit for work.

Prosecution was launched in due course and the accused was summoned by the Court. The High Court was moved at this stage and Mr. Pugh appearing on behalf of the Municipality contended that the High Court should not interfere under its revisional powers to quash the proceedings pending before the Magistrate at the stage at which they were and before the Magistrate had concluded them and come to a finding. The learned Judges quashed the proceedings and observed : " When it is brought to our notice that a person has been subjected for over two months to the harassment of an illegal prosecution it is our bounden duty to interfere." This case has always been regarded as the leading case on the subject and has been followed by all the High Courts.

This exceptional power is exercised by the High Court under sec. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which is to be read with sec. 435 and sec. 438 of the Code within the four corners of which this extraordinary power can hardly be brought. The only basis therefore is to be found in sec. 439 itself. The sections dealing with the powers of a Court of Appeal necessarily deal with those orders only from which under the Code there is an appeal provided; with reference to such orders the sections lay down the powers of a Court of Appeal. Ex hypothesi the revisional powers of the High Court are invoked when no right of appeal exists and although in some cases the High Court in exercising the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal may be able to correct an error it does not follow having regard to the variety of orders or proceedings which it may be called on to revise or deal with in its Revisional Jurisdiction, that it can, by exercising those powers, only redress a wrong or do complete justice. In other words, sec. 439 does not say that the High Court shall exercise only those powers that are conferred on a Court of Appeal but on the other hand it enacts that among the powers possessed by the High Court are the powers conferred on an Appellate Court. The legislature in enumerating the powers of the Court of Appeal had before its mind only a certain class of orders and in the very nature of things that enumeration cannot be found complete or exhaustive when the Court is called on to deal with orders of a different kind, orders not in the contemplation of the legislature when it was defining the powers of a Court of Appeal.

PRESENTATION OF DEEDS FOR REGISTRATION BY MINORS.

The second point which I want to deal with is whether an application made under sec. 73 of the Registration Act by a minor is meaningless by reason of his minority or valid and whether his verified application should be rejected as being invalid without giving him an opportunity of making a fresh application through a proper person although the period of one month provided in the said section has in the meantime expired.

Sec. 73 of the Registration Act says that in cases of denial of execution the Sub-Registrar shall refuse registration and record his reasons for doing so. The party aggrieved may within thirty days of that order apply to the Registrar for the purpose of registration. The application to the Registrar should be in writing and the statements in the application must be verified in manner required by law for the verification of plaints. Now the law that requires that a pleading shall be verified is to be found in Or. 6, r. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code, which lays down that (1) save as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force every pleading shall be verified at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case; (2) the person verifying shall specify by reference to the numbered paragraphs of the pleading what he verifies of his own knowledge and what he verifies upon information received and believed to be true; (3) the verification shall be signed by the person making it and shall state the date on which and the place at which it was signed. Also sec. 4 of the same Code provides that (1) in the absence of any provision to the contrary nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any special or local law now in force or any special jurisdiction or power conferred or any special form of procedure prescribed by or under any other law for the time being in force. The Civil Procedure Code does not mean to limit or otherwise affect any special or local law. It would not therefore be reasonable to suppose that the legal incidents attaching to a plaint under the Civil Procedure Code must govern a case under the Registration Act, a special Code complete in itself. Sec. 73 of the Registration Act says that an application is to be verified and as there is nothing in the Registration Act to give information on this point so the applicant is referred to Orr. 6 and 15 to learn the particulars there and to know the manner in which verification is to be made. There is no indication suggesting the capacity or otherwise of the party by whom verification is to be made. The rule simply lays down what is to be done in case of verification and that is everything contained in the rule. The phrase "in manner" may be taken to mean in imitation of. Otherwise what a claimant, an executor or an adoptive son under secs. 40 and 41 would do for whom no agent or representative is provided in the Act in case they apply under secs. 72 and 73?

If it be the intention of the Registration Act—and I think it is so—that a minor claimant can present a document for the purpose of registration the Civil Procedure Code cannot limit or otherwise affect his capacity to act as it does not limit the power of a minor to act under sec. 32 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. If we are satisfied that a minor claimant can present a document for the purpose of registration he can also file an application which is merely continuation of the proceeding initiated by his act of presentation. From above it is evident that a minor can file an application under sec. 73 and the verification made by him is quite proper. Even r. 2 of Or. 32, places a discretion upon the Court as to what it should do in case a plaint is filed by a minor. The rule does not lay down that the plaint should be thrown off and case dismissed.

Now under part VI of the Registration Act we find that the Act contemplates that both the Original and Appellate Jurisdiction of the Registrar should be exercised under Part XII of the Act. Sec. 74 lays down the procedure both in matters Original and Appellate. In case of this Appellate Jurisdiction no question of presentation would arise. The Registrar would enquire whether the document has been executed and whether the requirements of the Registration law have been complied with to entitle the document to registration (Vide Beng. Reg. Man. p. 41; 40 Ap. 434 at p. 444). Even if the application does not contain verification the defect is merely an irregularity, i.e., a defect in procedure which does not take away the jurisdiction of the Registrar to consider the application on its merits. The object of verification is clear if we turn to sec. 82 of the Registration Act by which a person is made punishable for giving a false evidence under sec. 193 of I. P. C., from which a minor is not excepted. Even if it be held that a minor claimant is quite incompetent to present a document under sec. 32 on the score of his minority being of imperfect discretion it is so held for his benefit and ultimate good. The very fact that a minor does present a document or file an application discloses his lack of appreciation of his interest which he injures by doing the act himself. If under the circumstances the law denies him the remedy without giving him an opportunity to rectify the mistake, the very object of law becomes frustrated because what was meant for his benefit, in effect does him irreparable injury. Even the hardship created by the cases of Majbunessa and Jambhuprosad has been met by the amending sec. 23A of the Registration Act by which the legislature has done away with the above mischief. This section lays down that even in cases of improper registration on a presentation by an unauthorised person, the invalidity may be cured by presenting the document for re-registration by the claimant within four months of the discovery of the mistake that the document has been improperly registered. If the legislature can excuse improper registration made in pursuance of a presentation made by an unauthorised person on behalf of the claimant it would be inconceivable that the legislature would not give an opportunity to a minor claimant who only applies for registration.

In view of the departmental instructions issued by the Inspector-General of Registration a great difficulty might possibly arise in cases of presentation by minor claimants for registration of documents executed in their favour as the registering officers are expected to follow the instruction rather than the intention of the law. I, therefore, beg to invite the attention of the legislature to make an early announcement declaring the eligibility of minor claimants to make a valid presentation for registration. Or if in spite of what I have shown it be held that minors as a class are quite incompetent to present documents for registration or file an application to the Registrar the legislature may enact suitable provisions similar to those contained in sec. 23A of the Registration Act so that an opportunity might be given to minors in cases of invalid registration or refusal of registration both by the Original and Appellate Courts to present their documents for re-registration or registration as the case may be within a definite period and in such manner as the legislature may deem fit and proper so that justice may not come in conflict with equity and good conscience.

The writer has endeavoured to tackle a knotty point of the Registration Law which not unoften arises in the presentation of documents for registration. There is an obvious conflict between the view taken by the Burma High Court in 33 J. C. p. 33 and that taken by the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal, and the fact that although an amendment of the Act was made since the decision of the Burma High Court, the legislature took no step to correct the view of that High Court leaves it in greater doubt than before as to which view is right.

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF COURT'S POWER TO PUNISH CONTEMPT.

To THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir,

With reference to your observations in your last issue of 16th February, regarding extension of powers of Court to punish summarily contempts not committed in facie curiæ, I beg to point out that the wider question discussed by you was not meant to be raised in my letter referred to therein. Resistance to execution of decrees of Civil Courts by defeated litigants was the only act of contumacy regarding which extension of Court's summary powers to punish the obstructor was suggested. The suggestion, no doubt, breaks in upon the traditional limits of the powers of inferior Courts to punish contempts of their lawful authority; but, with all respect for your valuable opinion, I beg to say that this particular act of contumacy stands on a somewhat different footing, and, from the point of view of expediency, the suggested enlargement of powers would not altogether be unjustifiable. As regards the apprehended danger of allowing a Court to punish an alleged disobedience of its own authority, it can be said, that the Legislature has already entrusted Courts with such powers in case of allied offences under secs. 175, 178, 179, and 180, Indian Penal Code, when committed in facie curiæ and likely to give equal, if not greater, annoyance. (Sec. 480, Cr. P. C.).

As to other cases of contempt, my letter had absolutely nothing to do.

DWIJENDRANATH PAL,
Munsif.

Review.

ECONOMICS OF SHIPPING. By S. N. Haji, B.A. (Oxon.), Bar-at-Law. Tata Publicity Corporation, Ltd., Bombay.

India with her vast coast line once possessed a mercantile marine and Indians used to trade with distant countries across the seas. But in this line she did not keep pace with the progress made by the Western people. Naturally Indian mercantile marine has become extinct. With the awakening of national self-consciousness which spread over the whole of India since the Swadeshi movement, there were attempts made in Bengal, Madras and Bombay to revive Indian-owned shipping. They have not met with much success yet. In Bengal and Madras, the first attempts proved failures. But those who are discouraged by failures never attain success. In Bombay they are manfully combating with difficulties. Mr. Haji is the Manager of the Scindia S. N. Co., Ltd. at Rangoon. His education, knowledge of law and practical experience in the shipping line has enabled him to produce a work which is quite unique in India. Having a practical experience of the difficulties, he is able to suggest how they may be overcome. But his work is not a political brochure but a methodical and scientific work which gives one an insight into the incidental questions connected with shipping. The learned author has put before the public a clear analysis of the science of shipping, a careful study of which will be highly beneficial to those who are interested in the subject. Professor Radha Kumud Mukherjee has compiled some historical accounts of Indian shipping in the past. Mr. Haji's book is a mathematics of the present. We endorse fully the view of Sir Dinsha E. Wacha that the "publication of this book at a time when the Indian Mercantile Marine Bill is to be placed on the anvil of the Indian Legislative Assembly is most opportune." Every page of the book is full of useful facts and information and there is no doubt they will not only be of assistance to the members when the Bill will be discussed in the Indian Legislature but also to those who are interested in the development of Indian shipping.

Contempt of Courts Bill.

The Contempt of Courts Bill is in many respects a misconceived measure. It owes its origin to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in The Amrita Bazar Patrika case (17 C. W. N. 1253), in which it was held that the High Court has no power to commit a person for contempt of a Criminal Court in the Mofussil. The High Courts in the Indian Presidencies are superior Courts of record and their power to punish for contempt of their own authority has never been doubted. The offence of contempt of Court and the power of the High Court to punish it are the same in such Courts as in the superior Courts in England. The High Court has thus the power of summarily punishing for contempt out of Court in relation to any of its jurisdictions.

In the month of May in 1913 a prosecution was started in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate of Barisal against forty-four persons on charges under sec. 121A, I. P. C. Shortly after the institution of the case a series of articles appeared in the Amrita Bazar Patrika which contained comments on the aforesaid prosecution and which in the opinion of the Government of Bengal constituted serious contempt of Court. On the application of the Advocate-General proceedings in contempt were taken by the High Court against the Editor and Manager and the Printer and Publisher of the Patrika.

It was contended by the Advocate-General that the King's Bench Division in England can deal with a case of contempt in the course of a proceeding before an inferior Court and it followed that the High Court in India had a similar power of dealing with any case of contempt in the course of a proceeding before an inferior Court subject to the High Court in its Appellate and Revisional Jurisdiction and subject also to its supervision under the charter. A special bench consisting of Jenkins, C. J., Stephen and Mookerjee, JJ., held that neither the Supreme Court nor the Sudder Dewany Adawlat nor the Sudder Nizamut Adawlat had jurisdiction to commit a person for contempt of a Criminal Court in the Mofussil and the Calcutta High Court, which has inherited all jurisdictions and every power and authority in any manner vested in the Supreme Court, the Sudder Dewany Adawlat and the Sudder Nizamut Adawlat, has not derived any such jurisdiction from any of those Courts.

The jurisdiction to commit for contempt of an inferior Court by summary proceeding which the King's Bench Division of the High Court in England assumed in Rex v. Davies [L. R. (1906) 1 K. B. 32], has been inherited by it from the old King's Bench and not from the other Courts of record which became amalgamated in the English High Court. That jurisdiction rested on the special power of that Court to correct and protect against extrajudicial error and to punish every kind of misdemeanour on a summary proceeding as well as on indictment or information as custos morum or the guardian and protector of public justice throughout the Kingdom, a dignity that reverted to it or was revived on the abolition of the Star Chamber. The common law powers as custos morum never belonged to the Supreme Court of Calcutta at least in regard to contempts of inferior Courts outside the Presidency Towns and the Calcutta High Court cannot lay claim to this power by inheritance or by reason of its having been constituted by charter a Court of record or by reason of its power of superintendence over the Courts of Mofussil Magistrates.

Opposed to the view of the Calcutta High Court is that of the Bombay and Madras High Courts which have held that they have ample authority to protect the Courts subordinate to them against contempt; in other words, they have the powers of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of England which are as unrestricted as the powers of the High Court to punish for contempt of its own authority.

In this state of things a bill was introduced in the Legislative Council in 1914 which purported to increase the classes of cases of contempt of Court punishable as offences under the Indian Penal Code, but this measure was dropped on account of the war.

The bill now before us defines the offence of contempt, makes it punishable with imprisonment for a term up to six months or with fine or with both and declares the power of the High Courts in India as also the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners to punish for contempt of their own authority or that of a Court subordinate to them. At the same time it declares that the powers of the aforesaid Courts to punish for contempt will be limited to the powers vested in them by this legislation.

The present bill thus goes very much beyond what is necessary and in providing for the protection of subordinate Courts it bars the inherent powers of the High Courts in respect of contempt of their own authority. After the decision of the Calcutta High Court the only thing that the Legislature was called upon to do was to remove any doubt as to the powers of the High Courts of Judicature in regard to the protection of the subordinate Courts from contempt but instead of doing that the bill proposes to curtail the existing jurisdiction of the High Courts as superior Courts of record as regards contempt of their own authority which they have exercised ever since their creation.

No doubt the powers of the High Courts in this respect are unlimited and the highest judicial authorities have expressed themselves about the necessity of care and caution with which the weapon of committal for contempt should be used and because their powers are unrestricted and uncontrolled the High Courts have always used them sparingly and with the greatest reserve consistent with the exercise of jurisdiction unfettered by any limitations imposed by statute. In its origin all legal contempts will be found to consist in an offence more or less direct against the sovereign as the fountain head of law and justice. Proceedings for contempt of Court should not be lightly taken for instead of upholding the dignity of the Court they have a contrary effect and this principle has always been followed by the highest Courts. The reluctance of the Courts to take action except in cases of great gravity may be traced, as pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in the Patrika case (17 C. W. N. 1253), to quite respectable antiquity. Historians record that when Emperor Augustus desired to punish a historian for contempt Mecaenus advised him that the best policy was to let such things pass and be forgotten. Caesar said on a similar occasion that to retaliate was only to contend with impudence and put oneself on the same level and even Tiberius acted upon the same view. The Theodosian Code also made this the law and expressly declared that slanderers of His Majesty should be unpunished, for if this proceeded from levity it was to be despised, if from madness it was to be pitied and if from malice it was to be forgiven for all such sayings were to be regarded according to the weight they bore.

In view of the decision of the Calcutta High Court in opposition to that of the other High Courts the legislature should only provide that the High Courts will have power to punish for contempt of subordinate Courts as much as for contempt of their own authority. Even as to the expediency of this measure we have grave doubts. No one will countenance the idea of a Court of Justice being brought into contempt but at the same time it must be remembered that proceedings conducted in a Court of Justice should always be open to public criticism which acts as a wholesome check on the vagaries of judges and magistrates which are not unfortunately uncommon and we apprehend that an enactment like the one contemplated by the bill in question will have the effect of stifling such criticism.

In the statement of objects and reasons we regret to notice certain inaccuracies in the reference to judicial decisions. It has been stated that the Calcutta High Court has taken a view contrary to that of the other High Courts "in the cases of King-Emperor v. Girindro Mohan Das and others (17 C. W. N. 1285) and Legal Remembrancer v. Moti Lal Ghosh (I. L. R. 41 Cal. 173)." In the first place the two cases are one and the same being reported in 17 C. W. N. 1253 (not 1285) and 41 Cal. 173, secondly, the contempt proceedings in the High Court arose out of the prosecution going on at that time in the Court of the Magistrate at Barisal against Girindro Mohan Das and others, but the decision of the High Court is reported in the Calcutta Weekly Notes under the cause title In re the Amrita Bazar Patrika and in the Indian Law Reports as Legal Remembrancer v. Moti Lal Ghosh. It may be noteworthy that the application for the issue of a writ of contempt as originally filed purported to be made by the Legal Remembrancer but the Court refused to entertain the application on the ground that the Legal Remembrancer had no locus standi in the Crown side of the High Court and thereupon the application was made by the Advocate-General on behalf of His Excellency the Governor in Council. That being so it is more correct to say that the judgment of the High Court was pronounced not in Legal Remembrancer v. Moti Lal Ghosh but in the matter of the Amrita Bazar Patrika in which proceedings in contempt were taken against that newspaper on the application of the Governor of Bengal.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Jan. 23rd.—In Monilal Gandhi v. Haji M. H. Mahomed (on appeal from Bombay), an agreement had been entered into between the Appellant and Respondent for sale to the latter of certain immoveable property in the town of Bombay. Delay took place in the completion of the contract and the Appellant, after notice to the Respondent that the purchase should be completed within a fixed time, rescinded the contract. The Respondent sued for specific performance and his suit was dismissed by the trial Judge who held that the notice for completion gave the Respondent a reasonable time in which to conclude the things that required to be done. The Appellate Court allowed an appeal from this decision and decreed specific performance.

Sir C. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant ex parte.

At the conclusion of the argument their Lordships delivered judgment and allowed the appeal.

Jan. 23rd and 26th.—In Sura Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandarama Pillai (Madras), Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé represented the Appellants ex parte.

The suit was instituted by the Respondent as heir of his mother Lakshmi Ammal for a declaration of title to property in the Madras District. The property was purchased by Chockalinga, the father of the Respondent, in the name of his wife Lakshmi, and the question for determination is whether Chockalinga or Lakshmi was the real owner of the property. Chockalinga having since been adjudged an insolvent, the trial Judge found in favour of Chockalinga's title but the Appellate Court reversed that decision.

The appeal was heard by the following members of the Judicial Committee:—

LORD SHAW, LORD BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI. Judgment was reserved.

Jan. 26th, 27th and 29th.—Diwan Chand Kirpa Ram v. Weld & Co. is an appeal from Lahore and raises a question on the construction of a mercantile contract. The Respondents were the agents of the Appellants in certain contracts for the purchase and sale of cotton. The contracts provided for a margin to be deposited with the Respondents. The latter demanded a certain sum by way of margin from the Appellants and were met with the reply that the amount demanded was unreasonable inasmuch as funds belonging to the Appellants were already in the hands of the Respondents.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Appellants.

Jan. 29th and 30th.—In the Council Chamber before LORDS SHAW and BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI, Tilakdari

Singh v. Mesho Prosad Singh, an appeal from Patna, was heard in which the dispute was as to the area of an estate liable to accretion and diluvion from the action of the Ganges.

The accreted estate had been formed into a mahal named Nowbara and settled with the ancestors of the Appellants. Later it was purchased on a sale for arrears of revenue on behalf of the Dumraon Raj. The Appellants contended that the property in dispute in the present appeal was of greater area than that settled as Nowbara and they contended that the surplus was really an accretion to their estate of Gungbara. The Courts in India had decided against them and the Privy Council after hearing the argument of the Appellants decided that no appeal lay.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Douglas McNair for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent.

Jan. 29th and 30th.—In the Board Room before LORDS WRENBURY, PHILLIMORE and CARSON was heard the appeal of Hope Prudhomme & Co. v. Hamel and Horley (Madras). This appeal was in respect of a counter claim by the Respondents for damages for failure by the Appellant to deliver 300 tons of ground nuts. The Respondents acted as selling agents for the Appellant and in 1916 they reported to him an offer for the goods which he accepted. The Appellant, booked freight for the contract but the vessel was requisitioned by Government and no other freight was procurable. In fact the Respondents had contracted to sell the goods to a London firm who were brokers, for a firm in Marseilles in the hope of making a secret profit. Proceedings were taken in the Court of Trade at Marseilles and the French firm were awarded damages. On receiving information of the award the Appellant for the first time became aware that the award was against a 3rd party and not against the Respondents as his agents and he accordingly repudiated liability. The Appellate Court in India held that the Appellant had adopted the Respondents' contract and they reversed the judgment of the trial Court which had dismissed the claim. Judgment was reserved.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Nelson, K. C. and O'Hagan for the Respondents.

Feb. 2nd.—In the Council Chamber, in Dhanraj Joharmall v. Sonabai (Central Provinces), judgment was delivered by MR. AMEER ALI and the appeal dismissed.

An application for special leave to appeal was made by Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and R. Hills in Secretary of State v. Steel Bros. (Rangoon). They stated that the question on which a decision of the Board was required was a question of law under the Indian Income Tax Act, and involved a finding which might reconcile the decisions in Swan Brewery Co. v. The King, 1914 A. C. 231 and Inland Revenue v. Blott, (1921) 2 A. C. 171. A. M. Latter, K. C. and Cyril King contended that the decree of the lower Court was an interlocutory decree and that the Appellant should have applied for leave to the High Court. Leave was refused but their Lordships did not state their reasons.

Jan. 30th, Feb. 2nd, 3rd and 5th.—The hearing is still continuing of an appeal from Bengal in Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Pradyumna K. Mullick, where the question for determination is whether during his turn as shebait, the Appellant is entitled to remove three Thakurs from the Thakur bari to his own house.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Appellant.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondents.

Only one Board is now sitting for the hearing of Indian appeals.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Political rivalry in the spirit of ahinsa.

Referring to the congratulations that the Earl of Oxford and Asquith received from the leaders of all political parties on the conferment on him of a peerage by His Majesty the King, our contemporary of the Law Times quotes the tribute which Professor Redlich, who is the author of the most comprehensive and reliable treatise on the English constitution and parliamentary practice, pays to the party system in England. The opinion of this learned author is all the more valuable because he is not an Englishman. He has come to form his opinion after the study of the constitution and the activities of the political parties not only in England but throughout the continent of Europe. The aim of the different political parties in England is to serve the best interests of the country and its people. There is thus always a healthy rivalry between the parties in this respect and a singular absence of ill-will or rancour. It is somewhat akin to the spirit of opposing counsel at the Bar. There is often no fundamental difference between the policy followed by one party or the other. For instance, the question of unemployment which was one of the chief concerns of the Labour Party has been taken up by the Conservative Party with no less zeal and earnestness. The same may be said with regard to the consolidation of European peace or other questions of national or international interest regarding which the aims and objects are the same, only the party programmes differ in details. The daily parliamentary reports furnish ample evidence of this. It is this generous rivalry amongst the parties that makes for the orderly political progress and the assimilation into the country's constitution of new ideas and ideals without any violent disruption of society. This spirit of service to one's country and people, healthy emulation and freedom from any feeling of bitterness, malice or bad-blood between political rivals is akin to our ideal of ahinsa about which we talk so much and observe so little in our public life. It is only by cultivating this spirit that we shall be able to promote national unity which is the condition precedent to the country's progress.

We therefore commend the following to our readers' attention:—

Professor Redlich, to whom, as a foreigner, the working of the British Constitution presents many novelties which are the subject of his acute and intelligent observation, emphasises the fact of the absence of party spirit, in the discussion and treatment of many questions, which he regards as a typical and distinguishing trait, which, when rightly grasped, is a clue to the inmost meaning of the whole English party system. There are always a number of important political subjects which are treated and discussed by the House of Commons in a spirit of unity with a feeling that it represents the nation as a whole. Such matters are not, therefore, dealt with on party lines. This conduct springs from the very character of the great English parties. Again, Professor Redlich writes: "The two parties which compete for power are not separated by the maintenance of irreconcilable principles, but by differences of method in approaching individual concrete questions of domestic, foreign, financial, economic, social and ecclesiastical policy, their differences, however important they may appear to eager partisans, are but varieties of method among men standing upon the broad platform of common national policy, common fundamental conceptions, and common interests. The marvellously strong national feeling, the intensely living historic tradition, and the deep conservative spirit which are so ingrained in all classes, carry the unexampled political and social cohesion of England, as compared with other States, to a height transcending all partisanship. This is the ultimate reason, and real explanation, of a characteristic phenomenon of both centuries of Parliamentary Government, namely, that in the classic land of party Government and party warfare the great collective interests of the State have at all times been, expressly or by tacit consent, removed from the province of party."

After quoting the above our contemporary proceeds:—

To this great characteristic of British public life—that the great Parliamentary parties are not divided by any unbridgeable chasm in the social life of the nation—is due the attitude of mind which makes the conferring, while his political opponents are in power, of a signal honour on Mr Asquith, one of the most formidable leaders of opposition in his generation, a subject of widespread gratification. This attitude of mind has found its expression in the raising, while they were sitting in opposition to the Government of the day in the House of Commons, to the position of Privy Councillors of Sir Edward (Viscount) Grey, Mr (Viscount) Haldane, and Mr. F. E. Smith (Earl of Birkenhead). Earl Balfour, speaking at Haddington on the 26th Sept. 1902, thus expounded and explained the limitations of party warfare in this country which has evoked the admiration of Professor Redlich. "The British Constitution," said Mr Balfour, "as it is now worked, is essentially a party system, but a party system can only be worked under really healthy conditions, can only be worked, at all events, under the best conditions, when the differences between the parties, though real, are not fundamental, essential, or of so revolutionary a character that they divide the classes of society or the sections of opinions in hopeless alienation from one another. The evil from which some of our continental neighbours have, in the course of their history, bitterly suffered is that they have attempted to work the party system, when the division between parties is so vital and fundamental that the 'ins' desire to destroy the 'outs' and the 'outs' attempt to become the 'ins' by revolutionary methods if no other methods are open to them. This is not the condition of things in which you can, in my judgment, work the representative system with any prospect of success, and it is because we have avoided that more by our own good fortune than by deliberate intention, because there seems to be some natural moderation in our British blood . . . that we have made the British Constitution the success it is."

Mandamus.

A curious case of mandamus arose in the American Courts. Zenophon Jones was convicted of man-slaughter. Governor Walton granted Jones a full valid and unconditional pardon. The pardon was regularly presented to the Secretary of State but he declined to attest it or affix the seal or record it in his office. Jones moved the Court praying that an alternative writ of mandamus might issue commanding the Secretary of State to perform these acts. The District Court denied the writ. Jones appealed. The appeal was dismissed on "the ground that as the pardon was incomplete Jones could take no interest under it and therefore had not the special interest requisite for maintaining the writ.

The learned commentator in the Harvard Law Review points out that the Court was in error in not granting the writ. "A writ of mandamus issues to compel the performance of a purely ministerial duty on the petition of one having a 'special interest' in the performance of that duty. This opinion assumes that the acts of sealing, attesting and recording a pardon are purely ministerial. The requisite special interest must be distinct from that obtaining in the general public but need not differ in kind. Persons owning land on both sides of a highway who wish the township to keep it in good repair, property-owners desirous of having the drainage commission remove drainage conditions injuring their property, riparian owners who want the Secretary of State to publish a bill providing for the creation of a levee in their district, all these have been held to have sufficient special interest to support mandamus. The interest of the expectant recipient of a pardon in its completion would seem to be an equally distinct and a more compelling interest than any in the cases cited."

In this country Chap. VIII of the Specific Relief Act confers upon the High Courts in the Presidency Towns power to compel a public servant to do a particular act. These Courts formerly enjoyed the right to issue the writ of mandamus as part of their ordinary jurisdiction, but now the exercise of this jurisdiction depends upon sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. Where the conditions mentioned in the section are satisfied it is competent to the Court upon a petition to that effect made by a person whose property franchise or personal right has been likely or is likely to be injured to make an order for the enforcement or prohibition of the specific act in question. The procedure prescribed has been borrowed from English practice and the High Courts generally follow the principles applicable to a writ of mandamus in dealing with an application under Chap. VIII.

LONDON NOTES

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Feb. 6th.—The hearing was concluded of Pramatha Nath Mullick v. Pradyumna Kumar Mullick. The arguments of Counsel had occupied 5 days and at the conclusion their Lordships intimated that they would consider their judgment. The case was referred to in the London Notes last week and relates to the right of worship of certain family Thakurs. The Appellant as one of the shebaitis claimed to be entitled during his term of office to remove the Thakurs to his own residence. That claim was contested by other members of the family on the ground that it was in contravention of an express declaration in a deed of trust.

Feb. 6th and 7th.—Kedarnath Goenka v. Anant Prasad Singh (Patna). This appeal was heard ex parte, the Appellant being represented by Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and E. B. Raikes. In a suit for possession and mesne profits reported in 17 C. W. N., p. 485, the present Appellant's father was successful in establishing his claim, and an order in Council provided for the ascertainment "at the execution stage" of mesne profits. The decree-holders died about 4 years later in 1918 and no application was made by their representatives within 6 months for substitution. In 1920 the Appellant applied for a declaration that the suit had abated and 3 weeks later the representatives of the deceased decree-holders obtained ex parte an order for substitution. The application now under appeal was made by the Appellant for cancellation of the order for substitution and for a declaration that the suit had abated. Both Indian Courts rejected the application holding that the inquiry as to mesne profits was a proceeding in execution of a decree within the meaning of Or. 22, r. 12 of the Civil Procedure Code and that therefore r. 3 of that order was not applicable. That view was endorsed by the Privy Council and the appeal was dismissed.

Feb. 9th and 10th.—Probhudas v. Ganidada (Bengal). This appeal referred to sugar contracts entered into between the parties. The Appellant was the purchaser and the Respondent seller. Delivery was effected ex-godown and the contracts were concluded but the present matter came before the Courts for determination in the form of a special case. The buyer claimed a refund from the seller of an amount calculated on the difference in the tariff value placed on sugar during the pendency of the contracts, the duty having been decreased from Rs. 26-4 to Rs. 16-4. The determination of the question depends on the construction of secs. 3 and 10 of the Indian Tariff Act. The Courts in India decided in favour of the seller. Judgment was reserved.

Mr. W. Wallach for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondent.

Feb. 9th and 10th.—Ghulam Rasul Khan v. Secretary of State for India (Lahore). The Appellant in this case had purchased agricultural land in the neighbourhood of Ludhiana and applied to have his name brought on to the Register. Leave was refused on the ground that the applicant was barred by the provisions of the Punjab Land Alienation Act, 1900 in that he was not a member of an agricultural tribe. The suit was then instituted by the applicant for a declaration that he was a mohal Rajput by caste and as such entitled to be a land-holder. The applicant was by profession a vakil. The appeal Court reversed the decision by the trial Court in the applicant's favour. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

Feb. 10th, 12th, 13th, 16th and 17th.—The hearing of an appeal of considerable importance was concluded on February 17th, Vaithialinga Mudaliar v. Srirangath Anni (Madras). A Hindu widow Chokkammal purported to adopt her husband's younger brother in 1862. The adopted son died 2 years later and his widow Murugathal obtained possession of the properties in suit and retained it until 1882 when Chokkammal regained possession.

In 1887 Murugathal brought a suit for the properties, in which she was successful; it being held that although the adoption was invalid she had a title by adverse possession. Murugathal subsequently transferred the property to the contesting Respondents in this appeal. Chokkammal died in 1902 and the suit under appeal was brought by his reversioners in 1905. They claimed that the Respondent's title came to an end on Chokkammal's death and that adverse possession was good only against her and for the period of her life.

The Respondents contended that the widow Chokkammal represented the estate and that a title by adverse possession against her bound the reversioners. They further contended that the claim of the Appellants was res judicata by reason of the 1887 suit and was barred by reason of Art. 129 and sec. 29 of the Limitation Act, 1871.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Messrs. W. Wallach and R. Pillai appeared for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and K. V. L. Narasimham for the Respondents.

The Board was composed of the following members LORD SHAW, LORD CARSON, LORD BLANESBURGH, MR. AMEER ALI and SIR JOHN EDGE.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before SANDERSON, C. J. and RANKIN, J. CIVIL REVISION No. 1025 of 1924. KESHORAM PODDAR, Petitioner v. NANDA-LAL MULLICK, Opposite Party. The 12th January 1925.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 109 (c) and 110—Leave to appeal to Privy Council from decision of High Court in Revision—Case involving substantial question of law and a question of general public importance, if a fit case for granting leave.

The Petitioner Keshoram Poddar was a tenant under the Opposite Party in respect of certain premises, the standard rent of which, on the Petitioner's application, was fixed by the Controller of Rents at Rs. 4,500. Against this order both parties applied to the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, for revision in November 1922. These cases ultimately came on for hearing in August 1924, when the President held that the Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920 and II of 1923) had expired on 31st March 1924, when the Calcutta Rent (Amendment) Act (I of 1924) came into force, whereby premises carrying a rental of over Rs. 250 per mensem were excluded from the operation of the Act, and all proceedings taken in respect of such premises terminated ipso facto and that he was junctus officio after 31st March 1924 and that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the applications for revision. The Petitioner thereupon obtained a Rule from the High Court on the ground that the Calcutta Rent Act, being an existing statute, the proceedings were saved by the General Clauses Act (I of 1899), but the Rule was ultimately discharged. Thereupon the Petitioner applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council under secs. 109 (c) and 110, C. P. Code and contended that there was a substantial question of law and a question of general public importance and that there was a right of appeal to the Privy Council. Referred to 14 C. W. N. 667 :

Held—That there did arise a question of general public importance and there was a substantial question of law involved in the case. It was therefore a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. B. L. Mitter, Standing Counsel (with Babu Prafulla Chandra Chakravarti) for the Petitioner.

Dr. D. N. Mitter (with Babu Narayan Chandra Kar) for the Opposite Party.

J. N. R. Leave to appeal granted.

The Late Lord Curzon of Kedleston.

It is with deep regret that we record the death of Marquess Curzon of Kedleston. He was one of the distinguished men of the present times, who has left his mark in the pages of Indian history and that of Europe as well. Born of a noble family who had by their talent and ability secured a high position in English society, George Nathaniel Curzon not only maintained its high traditions but also shed additional lustre on it. While at Oxford he distinguished himself not only as a scholar but also by his great command of speech and language. He was elected President of the Oxford Union and naturally aspired like its ex-presidents, Gladstone and Asquith, to be one day the Prime Minister of England. He received his early political training under Lord Salisbury and when in 1892 the elective principle was first introduced in the Legislative Councils in India by that conservative Prime Minister, Lord Curzon was the Under-Secretary of State for India. Like his master the Prime Minister and like the present Secretary of State, though professing to be a conservative, he was a bit of a free lance during his Parliamentary career. His rise in public life was rapid. He travelled extensively in the far East. India was a dreamland to him from early life. He published an account of his travels which bears a remarkable impress of his imaginative and youthful mind. He was the centre of an intellectual group of rising Imperialist politicians. In the Conservative Ministry he soon attained the position of the Under-Secretary of the Foreign Affairs. In 1899, his ambition to be the Viceroy and Governor-General of India was fulfilled. No Viceroy after Lord Dalhousie became Governor-General of India at such a comparatively early age. He was an indefatigable worker and unlike other incumbents of this high office, he personally supervised over the responsible work of every department of the State. He began his career in India brilliantly. He was a man of remarkable courage and had a strong desire to do justice even to the humblest and meanest of His Majesty's subjects quite regardless of powerful opposition. In this connection we need only remind our readers of Lord Curzon's resolution on the Chapra Constable's case. A poor constable had gone home on leave and suffered great injustice in the hands of the local executive. Despairing of getting any relief from the local Government he petitioned the Viceroy and Lord Curzon personally intervened and not only gave him relief but punished and censured those who had oppressed him. Then in the 9th Lancers' case, where a poor Indian cook was killed and the culprits would not come forward, he censured the regiment and cancelled their leave. In thus espousing the cause of the poor he at one time incurred the severe displeasure of the civilians and the military in India. Similar instances may be multiplied. It will suffice to say that many a poor clerk wrongfully dismissed from the department got relief by memorializing the Viceroy. He effected great improvement in departmental administration. The work he did for the preservation of the ancient monuments of India and the impetus he gave to archeological research in India was worthy of his great culture and would make his name memorable in the pages of Indian history for all times. The present discoverer of Mohengo Daro would have never been heard of but for Lord Curzon admitting him in the archeological department of the Government of India and encouraging him in his researches. Of course we had our differences with him and very serious ones too over the Partition of Bengal. But out of evil cometh good and we are grateful to him that his autocratic rule in this connection gave birth to nationalism and popularized the Swadeshi movement throughout India. We fought him and Sir Bamfylde Fuller over a public cause but all the same we must say, we never failed to recognise at heart, the good qualities that were in them. Sir Bamfylde Fuller, before he was forced to retire from India, publicly exclaimed regarding the Partition "Every great act required a sacrifice and I am the sacrifice." Lord Curzon might have erred in his policy but we bear him no ill-will on that account. Later in life he changed his ideas about India and during the Dyer debate in the House of Lords, his and Lord Birkenhead's speeches were the most sympathetic towards India. His services in connection with the restoration of peace in Europe and beyond after the Great War are too well-known to require repetition. A man of wonderful talent, energy and devotion to his own country's cause, he worked to the last moment of his physical capacity and actually died in harness. We join in paying this humble homage to his greatness, pray for his eternal peace and ask for forgiveness if we have ever wronged him in life.

Contempt of Courts Bill.

We noticed in these columns last Monday week (9th March) the objects and reasons of the contempt of Courts Bill, which was introduced into the Legislative Assembly this session and which is being circulated for opinion. Its object is two-fold. In the first place it seeks to limit the powers of the High Courts, including those that are Courts of Record, to punish contempt to imprisonment not exceeding six months or fine or both and in the next place to extend the jurisdiction of the High Courts, including the Courts of Judicial Commissioners of the Central Provinces, Oudh and Sindh, not only with regard to contempts in the nature of interference with or obstruction to the administration of justice in such Courts or in Courts subordinate thereto, but in respect of contempts in the nature of what is known as "scandalizing the Court itself." We reproduce below cl. 2 of the Bill:—

2. (1) Whoever, by words either spoken or written or by signs or by visible representation or otherwise, interferes with or obstructs or attempts to interfere with or obstruct the administration of justice in, or brings or attempts to bring into contempt, or lowers or attempts to lower the authority of, a Court specified in the Schedule or a Court subordinate thereto, is said to commit contempt of Court.

(2) Whoever commits any contempt of Court in respect of a Court specified in the Schedule or of a Court subordinate thereto may be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

With regard to the first portion of cl. 2 which seeks to invest the High Courts, specially those which are Courts of Record, with powers to punish interference with or obstruction to the proper administration of justice in Courts subordinate thereto, there can hardly be any reasonable objection. It will be remembered, as we pointed out in noticing the objects and reasons of this Bill, that the Madras and Bombay High Courts have held that as Courts of Record they have this inherent jurisdiction. But Jenkins, C. J., held in the Calcutta High Court in the Amrita Bazar Patrika case, when its Editor was charged with contempt, for having commented on a case which was being tried in a Magistrate's Court at Barisal, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of such contempt. Such jurisdiction was exclusively enjoyed by the King's Bench Division in England. His Lordship may have been technically right.

But it appears from R. v. Davies, [1906] 1 K. B., p. 32, that the King's Bench Division exercised this jurisdiction only in recent times, there being no reliable earlier authority in this respect excepting that of R. v. Parke, [1903] 2 K. B., p. 432. Wills, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court (Alverstone, C. J., Darling, J. and Wills, J.) observed that the King's Bench alone exercised this jurisdiction because it had the power of superintendence and revision over the subordinate Courts. The Chancery and other Divisions of the High Court were no doubt all Courts of Record and could punish summarily for contempt but had no concern with the subordinate Courts. Now the High Courts in India have also powers of superintendence and revision over the Courts subordinate thereto. The High Courts at Calcutta, Madras and Bombay also claim to have inherited common law jurisdiction like the King's Bench Division in many respects. The Madras and the Bombay High Courts, therefore, held that they have as much power to punish contempts of the subordinate Courts as the King's Bench Division. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, however, held that the King's Bench Division according to the doctrine of English common law is custos morum, i.e., guardian of the morals of the nation, and in that capacity could exercise this special jurisdiction when occasion required, but the High Courts in India could not exercise any such jurisdiction.

In view of this divergency of opinion in the Presidency High Courts, it is no doubt desirable to remove the conflict by legislation. If the Indian Legislature sought to do this by providing that the High Courts in India could punish at their discretion interference with or obstruction to the administration of justice in the Courts subordinate thereto as is contemplated in R. v. Davies, we would hardly have taken any exception to it. We have this confidence in the High Courts that they would not avail themselves of such discretionary powers in any but very exceptional cases. We are further of opinion that the provisions of sec. 228 of the Indian Penal Code and sec. 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are ordinarily sufficient to meet cases of contempt committed in the presence of the subordinate Courts. In England such contempts of subordinate Courts are punished by indictment and the same is the case with regard to insults or interruptions made punishable under sec. 228, I. P. C. Sec. 480, Cr. P. C., provides a summary remedy but limits the punishment to Rs. 200. The only cases which are not covered by the existing provisions of the statute law in India are where cases under trial in the subordinate Courts are made the subject-matter of comment in the public press. In such cases there can be no harm in conferring discretionary powers on the High Court to take cognisance of such contempts on the lines laid down in R. v. Davies. In this case a woman was charged, with abandoning a child and pending the preliminary enquiry before a Magistrate and before commitment, grave allegations regarding the antecedents and character of the woman were published in a newspaper by Davies, its editor and publisher. A rule was applied for before the King's Bench, which was issued and heard and Davies was fined £100 and ordered to pay costs of the whole proceedings.

Contempt By "scandalizing the Court itself."

But we do most strongly object to invest the High Court and the Judicial Commissioner's Court with powers to attach & commit persons for contempt for offences against the dignity of the subordinate Courts, as is contemplated in the latter part of Cl. 2 (1). So far as the High Courts, which are Courts of Record, are concerned, they have long enjoyed the power exclusively in respect of contempts of their own authority and it is seldom that they make any use of it. After Surendra Nath Banerjee's case, the Calcutta High Court has not committed any body to prison for any such contempt. Considerable changes in the judicial interpretation of this power have taken place since then. The High Courts in India would now surely follow the principles laid down by Lord Morris in McLeod v. St. Aubyn, [1899] A. C., p. 549 : s.c. 3 C. W. N. (notes) p. cccxvi. Lord Morris said with regard to such contempt that "it is not to be used for the vindication of a judge as a person. He must resort to action for libel or criminal information. Committal for contempt of Court is a weapon to be used sparingly, and always with reference to the interests of the administration of justice."

Lord Morris later on in the judgment says : "Committals for contempt of Court by scandalizing the Court itself have become obsolete in this country (England)." With regard to this the judgment of Russel, L. C. J., in R. v. Gray, [1900] 2 Q. B., p. 36, may be cited in support of the view, that it has not become quite obsolete. But in that case the gross character of the contempt coupled with the fact that the Assizes over which Darling, J., was then presiding were not over, weighed with the Lord Chief Justice in exercising this extraordinary jurisdiction. Still in this case no sentence of imprisonment was passed and it may be said to have become a rule since then that only fines are to be inflicted for such contempts. If, however, punishment by imprisonment is now provided by legislation, this rather obsolete form of punishment may again be revived. In ordinary cases where no mischief has been done, an apology ought to suffice.

Lord Morris, no doubt, said, that although such commitments have become obsolete in England yet in small colonies consisting of coloured population the exercise of such jurisdiction may in proper cases be considered necessary. But it must also be noted that in this particular case their Lordships held that McLeod, a barrister, had been improperly committed for contempt by St. Aubyn, Officiating Chief Justice of St. Vincent, to a fortnight's imprisonment and fine. The conviction and sentence were quashed and the Chief Justice was ordered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to pay the costs of the proceedings. This decision shows conclusively that the Privy Council is of opinion that the summary power of contempt as exercised even by the superior Courts should be sparingly used and even then with great caution and only in the interest of justice and not from any false notion of personal dignity.

It is therefore altogether unjustifiable on the part of the Indian Legislature to seek to extend the law for promoting a false notion of dignity in our Mofussil Courts. R. v. Davies, which marks the farthest limit to which the jurisdiction of the High Courts may be extended in the interest of administration of justice in respect of contempts of the subordinate Courts, far from laying down or suggesting that the King's Bench Division would ever take proceedings in contempt for the maintenance of the dignity of such Courts, expressly says that it should not. At p. 40, Wills, J., repudiates the idea that "the offended dignity of a particular Court or of the persons who compose it is the subject of punishment in such a case," and his Lordship quotes with approval the principle laid down by Lord Justice Bowen in Helmore v. Smith, [1886] 1 Ch. D., p. 155, that "the object of the discipline conferred by the Court is, in case of contempt of Court, not to vindicate the dignity of the Court or the person of the Judge but to prevent undue interference with the administration of justice." We have seen that Lord Morris lays down the law in identical terms in McLeod v. St. Aubyn. The Indian Legislature will therefore be well-advised either to drop the Contempt of Courts Bill altogether or, in any case, omit the latter part of cl. 2 (1) which, contrary to all principle or precedent, seeks to extend contempt in the nature of "scandalizing the Court itself" to the scandalising of even subordinate Courts and make such offences punishable by the High Courts and Judicial Commissioner's Court in India.

Provisions in the Penal Code and Cr. P. Code for punishment of contempt or obstruction to justice in subordinate Courts.

Sec. 228 of the Indian Penal Code lays down that whoever intentionally offers any insult or causes any interruption to any public servant while such public servant is sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

Judicial proceeding being a proceeding in which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath the section covers all Civil, Criminal and Revenue Courts as also Registrars and Sub-Registrars.

Sec. 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides a summary procedure for the trial of these cases of contempt but if this summary procedure is adopted the sentence is limited to a maximum of a fine of two hundred rupees. The section lays down—when any such offence as is described in sec. 175, sec. 178, sec. 179, sec. 180 or sec. 228, I. P. C., is committed in the view or presence of any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court, the Court may cause the offender to be detained in custody and at any time before the rising of the Court on the same day may if it thinks fit take cognizance of the offence and sentence the offender to a fine not exceeding two hundred rupees and in default of payment to simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month unless such fine be sooner paid.

Sec. 480 may be enforced by any Magistrate even if the offender is a European British subject. The offences contemplated by the other sections of the Indian Penal Code mentioned in sec. 480 of the Code of Criminal Procedure may be said to be cognate to the offence of contempt of Court properly so called coming within the purview of sec. 228, I. P. C. Sec. 175 deals with omission to produce a document to a public servant by a person legally bound to produce it. Refusing oath or affirmation duly required by a public servant to make a statement is punishable under sec. 178. Sec. 179 deals with refusing to answer a public servant's question and a person refusing to answer any statement made by him when required to sign that statement by a public servant legally competent to require that he shall sign that statement is punishable under sec. 180 of the Indian Penal Code.

Verification of confession and identification parade.

There are certain things which Magistrates are sometimes called upon to do during police enquiry. The most noteworthy of these are verification of confessions and identification parades. Almost in every important case in which an accused makes a confession the police ask for a Magistrate being deputed to verify the confession. The Magistrate is taken by the investigating police officer to the place of occurrence where the confessing accused is produced before him and is made to repeat his statement and point out the places referred to therein. As far back as 1902 when Mr. Justice Prinsep was presiding over the criminal bench a reference was made by the Sessions Judge of Gaya for the confirmation of a sentence of death passed in a case in which verification of confession had been resorted to by the police. The prisoner Radha Halwai was arrested by the police almost immediately after a murder said to have been committed by several persons was reported. The very next day he was placed before a Magistrate and made a confession. On the application of the investigating police officer the Magistrate, who was holding the preliminary enquiry deputed a Subordinate Magistrate nominated by the police officer to verify the statement of the accused who was remanded to police custody for that purpose. The Magistrate went to the spot and the accused pointed out to him various places connected with the occurrence and also made some statements to him describing how the murder was committed and giving some details not previously mentioned.

Mr. Justice Prinsep strongly condemned the procedure adopted and observed as follows:—"The proceedings taken before the Magistrate seem to us to be open to the strongest objection. The verification system apparently has been recently introduced in consequence of a circular issued by the Inspector-General of Police last year and there is scarcely a case of any heinous crime in which it is not now put into operation. It can very rarely be adopted for any useful purpose. Its real object seems to be to add fictitious weight to a confession recorded after an accused has been for twenty-four hours in police custody and to embarrass a Judicial Officer when he has to determine at the trial whether that confession which has been repudiated and denied immediately after it was made and on the first opportunity when the prisoner was free from all influences, real or imaginary, from the police, was voluntarily made and whether it is a true statement of what actually took place. From this point of view we think that the practice is very objectionable. The general effect of a verification so conducted would be to give the sanction of a Magistrate's presence to anything that the investigating police officer might bring before him. Such verifications are surely always committed to a Magistrate of the lowest class and of little or no experience. How would the rural and unintelligent public regard proceedings so conducted by a Magistrate in close connection with the police? Is it likely that any complaint would be made to such a Magistrate regarding misconduct of the police? The villagers would certainly not feel that such a complaint would receive proper attention and they would therefore abstain from making a complaint which, if not established, would render them liable to serious consequences." One would naturally expect that a practice so strongly condemned by a Judge of the position and eminence of Mr. Justice Prinsep would be abolished but unfortunately the system of verification of confession is still in vogue and bears testimony to the disinclination of the police and the executive to give up objectionable practices in spite of the protests of the Hon'ble Judges.

The other objectionable practice is that of holding identification parades in jails. A Magistrate is taken to the jail and the accused mixed up with some other persons are made to stand in a row before him. The police produce persons who profess to be eye-witnesses to the occurrence in question and they identify the accused in the presence of the Magistrate. These persons figure as the important witnesses to the occurrence at the trial and the Magistrate is called to depose that they identified the accused in his presence. The obvious object with which these identification parades are held is to pin the witnesses down to the statements made by them to the police. It is said that one abuse leads to another and Lal Sing v. Crown, I. L. R. 5 Lahore 396, is an instance in point. The Magistrate in whose presence the identification parade had been held in jail was called as a witness in the Sessions Court. Instead, however, of stating in Court the details and the results the witness merely referred to certain documents which were described as exhibits in which he stated that his evidence was to be found. These documents were put on the record as his evidence. This strange method of recording evidence called for the strongest remarks from their Lordships. As pointed out by Fford, J., there is no doubt that it would shorten the labours of a trial Judge if he were to be permitted to record written statements of witnesses in the form of exhibits by the mere production of the witnesses and their testimony that the exhibits embody the details of their evidence, but any person with any knowledge of and regard for judicial procedure should know that such a method of recording testimony would if applied to the witnesses reduce the trial to a mere travesty. As regards the evidentiary value of a statement describing what took place in an identification parade the learned Judge says :—"The mere fact that a witness is able to pick out an accused person from amongst a crowd does not prove that he has identified that accused person as having taken part in the crime which is being investigated. It might merely mean that the witness happens to know that person. The principal evidence of identification is the evidence of a witness given in Court as to how and under what circumstances he came to pick out a particular accused person and the details of the part which that accused took in the crime in question. The statement made by such a witness at an identification parade might be used to corroborate his evidence given in Court but otherwise the evidence of identification furnished by an identification parade can only be hearsay except as to the simple fact that a witness was in a position to show that he knew a certain accused person by sight." In the Barrah dacoity case Sir Lawrence Jenkins took serious objection to identification parades and held that they are of little probative value.

Courtesy between political rivals.

We noticed in a previous issue the spirit of healthy emulation and generous rivalry that exists between political opponents in England in the service of the country. This never stands in the way of their offering each other courtesy and social amenities in public functions or in private life. We note that Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Ramsay MacDonald were amongst the pall-bearers at the funeral service held for the late Lord Curzon at Westminster. The following extract from the Law Times describes the reception that Lord Oxford and Asquith had on his being introduced into the House of Lords :—

The circumstances accompanying the introduction to the House of Lords of Lord Oxford and Asquith constitute an object-lesson of the most delightful feature of public life in this country—that political differences do not affect personal relationships, and that the foremost political opponents are not infrequently the most intimate personal friends. One of the introducers of the new peer was Lord Balfour, who for more than a generation had faced him in uncompromising opposition in the House of Commons. Lord Curzon, as Leader in the House of Lords of the Government to which Lord Oxford is in opposition, referred to his accession to the House of Lords as conferring an additional lustre and distinction on that assembly, while the House itself was filled with members who desired, by their presence, to manifest their hearty personal goodwill to Lord Oxford, whose old colleagues in the House of Commons, of all parties, filled every available space for strangers in the Chamber of the House of Lords for the purpose of witnessing, with interest and sympathy, the ceremony.

HINDU POLITY.

HINDU POLITY. By K. P. Jayaswal, M.A. (Oxon), Bar-at-Law. Butterworth & Co., Calcutta.

Mr. Jayaswal commenced his researches on the above subject when he was a member of the Calcutta Bar and received considerable encouragement in his work from the late Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri and the editor of this journal: The results of his early researches on the subject were published in our columns in the course of 1911-1912. These issues of the Calcutta Weekly Notes were forwarded to some German savants and they expressed high appreciation of Mr. Jayaswal's work. We can personally testify that Mr. Jayaswal was quite original in his researches in this direction. So much so, that when he used to read the texts that he had collected together and the conclusions that he had drawn from them, we used to chaff him and at the same time ask him to give us more of his kahani (fables) before he would convince us that his interesting theories were after all based on a solid foundation of facts. Our scepticism encouraged him to devote critical examination to his data and what is more, to exercise more care and caution in drawing his conclusions, with regard to which he spared no pains to test and verify them himself, and even to court adverse criticism. In the present work he has digested the results of his researches to which he has devoted so many years of industry and scholarship of a kind for which he has a genius all his own. In the present work he has strung together facts and given us a pen and ink sketch of the ancient Hindu polity as he found them recorded in authentic treatises without any dash of colour for distorting our vision. While he was engaged in recasting his published early researches in this scientific form, many an aspirant for cheap literary notoriety sought to bedeck themselves in borrowed plumes and attempted to parade before the public as the pioneers of such research. But Mr. Jayaswal's great contribution to the early history of the Hindus has survived all such spurious attempts to take the shine out of his work and after the many vicissitudes that it had to undergo since it attracted the attention of the Calcutta University, it has emerged as one of the most original contributions to the history of ancient India from the pen of an Indian non-Brahmin scholar of the present democratic age. We do not say that what Mr. Jayaswal contributes to the stock of knowledge regarding the ancient institutions of Hindusthan is the last word on the subject but we say that he has let in new light into an unexplored region of the ancient civilization of Aryavarta.

This book comes as a surprise to many who are ignorant of the East and as a revelation to those who are learned in its ancient lore. Political institutions of the kind noticed in this work are believed to be comparatively modern in their origin. The author has struck out a new path for himself, which both Indian scholars and European orientalisists will do well to pursue for widening the field of knowledge with regard to this ancient land and thus establish a closer link between the past and present.

We give below a short outline of what this remarkable work principally deals with.

We can all remember the day when it was universally thought that monarchy, absolute and autocratic, was the only constitution that appealed to the Indian mind—and that alone suited the genius of the folk, and consequently the future too (being rooted in the past) would have to be a replica of some form of personal despotic rule.

But Mr. Jayaswal lays the authorities before us. He demonstrates plainly that the root of the constitutions at the dawn of history were the Vedic Samiti and Sabha and when a King did exist, he had to rule with the consent of these assemblies.

Then the author traces the rise of Hindu republics and their early origin and there was a number of them before the advent of Buddhism. Sanghas were political bodies known to Panini and jana and gana were synonymous expressions which meant the people at large and signified the democratic character of these assemblies. These political Sanghas faded into religious organisations modelled after them in Buddhistic times, when this humanitarian religion absorbed within its fold all the moral activities of life. Mr. Jayaswal after noticing the action and re-action between the religious and temporal activities of the ancient Hindus goes on to throw additional light on its outer fringe such as the Licchavis, a liberty-loving republican people whom Dr. Rhys Davids rescued from obscurity.

The Arthasasthra has of late been too often quoted by anybody and everybody who poses as an authority in ancient Indian history, but not with much fruitful result. It is in the hands of the author of Hindu Polity that it has done so and been made to yield its quota to his valuable contributions on the subject and led to its general appreciation.

The Greeks have often been quoted only to prove the absence of civilisation in the country, but Mr. Jayaswal proves the mystery of Megasthenes and his successors.

As we have observed before our author is brilliant in generalisation and careful in his details. He gives us a comprehensive survey not only of republics which actually existed in early Hindu times, but also of theories dealt with by the ancient authors.

The evidence of the Mahabharata has been the stock-in-trade of the oriental and occidental scholars of ancient Indian polity but never before have our reasons been roused, our heart touched and our mind convinced.

Our author next passes on to Asoka and his age, and the Saughla period which terminates with the advent of the Guptas.

Monarchies next come in for consideration and our readers are already familiar with the magnificent coronation oath originally published in these columns, and dealt with by the author. We are also told of the election of the King in Vedic times as also how he was deposed and re-elected.

The kingship does not degenerate into a mere hereditary office even in the Brahman age. The ancient Hindus, intensely religious and spiritual as they were, avoided the dangers inherent in the theory of Divine Right. Perhaps they regarded any such doctrine as blasphemous. We get too a complete account of the checks and balances which neutralised the evils associated with undiluted despotism. And in details of administration, such as, justice and the raising and disposal of taxation, safe-guards are worked out with admirable logic.

Monarchy leads on to Imperialism, and in this realm there is enough to satisfy the most blatant chauvinistic mentality.

For, in truth, the ancients worked out each theory to its logical consequences.

To appreciate the real worth of the work, it must be carefully studied. It reflects all the more credit on the author that in a truly scholarly spirit he claims no personal credit for it and throws open the wealth of information collected by him for the benefit of the public and appeals to co-workers in the same field to regard them as their own and make any use of them they like for the advancement of human knowledge. We congratulate him for lifting the darkness that has so long hung heavily over this land of mystery and hope, it will contribute to a better understanding of the East by the West.

MORTGAGE OF NON-EXISTENT PROPERTY.

By A. P. PANDEY, M.Sc., LL.B.

An instrument, professing to convey property not in existence at the time, is void at law for the simple reason that the subject-matter of the contract does not exist at the time and therefore there is nothing upon which the contract can operate. Likewise, in equity, an assignment dealing with property which does not exist is inoperative and ineffective as an immediate alienation for the reason aforesaid. To quote the weighty pronouncement of Phillimore, L. J., in Industrial Finance Syndicate, Ltd. v. Lind, [1915] 2 Ch. D. 315, "a man cannot, in equity, any more than at law, assign what has no existence." But equity does not stop here. It proceeds further and gives effect to an assignment of future property by treating it as a contract to assign when such property comes into existence. The moment, the assignor comes to own the property, answering the description given in the contract, equity looks upon the ownership of the assignor as that of a trustee for the benefit of the assignee in accordance with the maxim, which Lord Thurlow said, he took to be universal, "that whenever persons agree concerning any particular subject, that, in a Court of Equity, as against the party himself, and any one claiming under him, voluntarily or with notice, raises a trust." In the initial stage of the contract, the assignee is only an equitable assignee, but he, at once, acquires the legal estate and becomes entitled to the conveyance of the property when it comes into existence. The principle is not far to seek. It is only an enunciation of the rule that equity considers that as done which ought to be done. A contract for valuable consideration engaging to transfer property to come into existence at some time in future, is looked upon as a complete transaction when the property answering the description given in the contract comes into existence, and equity treating that as done which ought to be done, compels the assignor to convey the property to the assignee. In other terms, a man may contract to assign property, of which he is not possessed at the time, for valuable consideration and equity will fasten upon the property when it does become possessed of it. Obviously, therefore, an assignment of this description is recognised not as an immediate alienation but as a contract to come into force when the promisor happens to possess the property contemplated by the contract.

But a transaction of this class ought not to be mixed up and confused with executory contracts. The assignee, at the time of the assignment, fulfils his part of the obligation. The only thing that remains to be done is the performance of his obligation by the assignor when the property comes into existence. To be more precise, an assignment of this class is a present transfer to come into force at a subsequent period on the happening of a certain contingency and equity comes to the rescue of the assignee when the contingency takes place. But the nature of the relief granted by equity is dependent upon the terms of the contract and the class of property involved in the transaction. In the case of moveable property, the ends of justice are satisfied if damages are awarded to the assignee when the assignor fails to carry out his part of the obligation. But if the assignment relates to immoveable property money is hardly a consolation to the aggrieved assignee. Land has got its own special value and is incapable of assessment in coins. Under these circumstances, the equitable doctrine of specific performance comes into play, and the assignor is compelled to convey the legal estate in the property to the assignee. But the condition precedent to the award of a decree for specific performance is the existence of something specific in respect to which performance can be directed. In other words, the subject-matter of the assignment must be so phrased as to be capable of identification. It is not necessary that it should admit of identification at the time of the assignment but it should be capable of identification when the assignment is sought to be enforced. Then again, the terms of the assignment should not be so broad and comprehensive as to cover too wide an area. A contract engaging to transfer all the after-acquired earnings of an individual is inequitable and offensive to public policy because it is so comprehensive as to denude the mortgagor of the means of maintaining himself. An assignment, embracing so wide and extensive a subject-matter, will not be enforced by a Court of Equity.

The leading English case—rather the classical case—with reference to this transaction is Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. C. 191. The facts of the case, in short, are that Taylor, the owner of certain machinery in a mill, executed a deed in favour of Holroyd by which it was declared that the machinery was the property of Holroyd and it was further covenanted that all machinery which would henceforth be brought into the mill will belong to Holroyd. The Sheriff seized the machinery so brought in by Taylor, Holroyd claimed them as an equitable assignee. Therefore the question was as to what was the position of Holroyd. Lord Westbury answers: "But if a vendor or mortgagor agrees to sell or mortgage property, real or personal, of which he is not possessed at the time, and he receives consideration for the contract and afterwards becomes possessed of the property answering the description in the contract, there is no doubt that a Court of Equity would compel him to perform the contract, and that the contract would in equity transfer the beneficial interest to the mortgagee immediately on the property being acquired . . . It follows, that immediately, on the new machinery and effects being fixed or placed in the mill, they became subject to the operation of the contract, and passed in equity to the mortgagee, to whom Taylor was bound to make a legal conveyance, and for whom he, in the meantime, was a trustee of the property in question."

Another case of equal importance is Edward Tailby v. The Official Receiver, 13 App. Cas. 523. Herein, the question for determination was whether an assignment, by way of security, of certain book-debts due and owing, or which might during the continuance of the security become due and owing, to the mortgagor in any trade which he might, thereafter, carry on in any place was valid so as to give the assignee a good title to them when they came into existence. "There is," says Lord Watson, at p. 533, "but one condition which must be fulfilled in order to make the assignee's right attach to a future chose in action, which is, that, on its coming into existence, it shall answer the description in the assignment, or in other words, that it shall be capable of being identified as the thing, or as one of the very things assigned. When there is no uncertainty as to its identification, the beneficial interest will immediately vest in the assignee. Mere difficulty in ascertaining all the things which are included in a general assignment, whether in esse or in posse (in actual or possible existence), will not affect the assignee's right to those things which are capable of ascertainment or are identified."

The case of Collyer v. Isaacs, to be found in 19 Ch. D. 342, provides interesting reading on the question whether a debtor, after the order of discharge, is free from liability due to a mortgagee of this class if the mortgagee does not choose to prove his security bond in insolvency proceedings. The debtor, in this case, executed a mortgage-security to his creditor which contained in form an assignment of all future chattels which should be brought upon certain premises. Then the debtor applied in insolvency that his affairs should be liquidated and subsequently obtained an order for discharge. The debtor, after his discharge, brought other chattels on the premises, and the creditor claimed these chattels under his mortgage-security. The debtor brought this action to prevent, by injunction, his creditor from selling his after-acquired chattels. Jessel, M. R., says, "The creditor had a mortgage-security on existing chattels and also the benefit of what was in form an assignment of non-existing chattels which might be afterwards brought on to the premises. That assignment, in fact, constituted only a contract to give him the after-acquired chattels . . . . Until the property comes into existence, the contract remains only a contract by which the party entering into it will be bound, and when the property comes into existence, it is a contract for the breach of which he will incur liability." As the creditor did not prove his mortgage-security in the course of the insolvency proceedings, it was held, that the debtor, after the order of discharge, was exempted from every obligation under the mortgage-security and no liability attached to the chattels brought on the premises subsequent to the order of discharge.

The cases of Belding v. Read, 3 H. & C. 955 and In re Clarke, Coombe v. Carter, 36 Ch. D.

Now let us turn to the law of this country and find out whether there is any act or provision of law which sanctions transactions of the type under consideration. The Transfer of Property Act, prima facie, deals with disposition of property in presenti. It does not expressly provide for the transfer of future property.

The words "transfer of property" have been defined by sec. 5 of the said Act as, "an act by which a living person conveys property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons, or to himself and one or more other living persons." The presence of a comma after the word "property" and before the words "in present or in future," suggests that the words "in present or in future" govern and qualify the verb "conveys" and not the noun "property." It is unfortunate that the Legislature did not deem it advisable to lay down a definition of the word "property" with which the Act deals. Now, this argument is strengthened by the collocation of sec. 6 which enumerates a list of exceptions to the rule that "property of any kind may be transferred" and mentions in the forefront that a mere chance of succession, a mere expectation to receive a legacy on the death of a relation or any other mere possibility of allied nature is inalienable. In other words, it prohibits transfer of a particular class of future property. As a matter of academical interest, it will be an excusable digression, to mention here that there is a divergence of opinion in the English Judiciary on this particular point. Lord Hardwicke has held in Channay v. Graydon, 2 Atk. 610, that though in law a possibility is not assignable, yet in equity where it is done for a valuable consideration, it has been held to be assignable and transmissible to the representative of the devisee. While, to the contrary, Lord Eldon has observed in Carleton v. Leighton, 3 Merivale 667 (1805) at p. 671, "That the expectancy of an heir-presumptive or apparent (the fee simple being in the ancestor) was not an interest or a possibility nor was capable of being made the subject of assignment or contract." But so far as this country is concerned, the section has settled that such a property is not capable of alienation and for a very good reason, if speculation is permissible. The transfer of such a possibility is an offence against public policy, inasmuch as the transferee, in order to achieve the fruit of his bargain, may yield to the temptation of bringing about, somehow or other, the end of the life which stands between his transferor and the property, the subject-matter of the contract.

Now the next question is, does sec. 6 of the Act forbid transfer of future property of every description? In other words, does the expression "any other mere possibility of a like nature" embrace future property of every description or is its scope to be confined to the property ejusdem generis with those immediately preceding? It is a settled rule of interpretation that the general word which follows particular and specific words of the same nature as itself, takes its meaning from them, and is presumed to be restricted to the same genus as those words. [See the observation of Willes, J., in Fenwick v. Schmulz, L. R. 3 C. P. 313.] Further to construe this into an absolute prohibition against transfer of future property will be imputing ignorance to the framers of the Act in respect to the well-known cases of Holroyd v. Marshall and Paiby v. Official Receiver, noticed above. Therefore it can be safely said that this section is exhaustive and not illustrative. It enacts against the transfer of a particular class of future property only. In other words, a mere chance of succession, a mere expectation to receive a legacy or a mere possibility of like nature is an exception to the rule that future property can be made the subject-matter of assignment. The doctrine of feeding the grant by estoppel, embodied in sec. 43 of the Act, is an illustration of the intention of the Legislature to recognise the validity of the transaction under consideration. If the grantor purports to convey a property, to which he has got no title at the time and if he happens to own the property subsequently, then the property passes at once to feed the grant and the grantor is estopped from going back upon the grant.

Turning to the case-law, the earliest case on the point is Lalla Teeluckdharee Lall v. The Court of Wards and another, [1869] 11 W. R. 149. Teeluckdharee borrowed money on the security of certain fees in deposit or to be deposited to his credit in the Collectorate. The question for determination was as to what was the character of the mortgagee. The Hon'ble E. Jackson and C. Hobhouse, JJ., upheld the mortgage and entered judgment for the mortgagee.

The question involved in the case of Misri Lal and others v. Mozhar Hossain and others, I. L. R. 13 Cal. 262, was whether the mortgage of indigo crops that may be grown upon a certain plot of land is a valid transaction. "Such a transaction," observe their Lordships Mr. Justice Mitter and Mr. Justice Agnew, at p. 264, "as this, is neither governed by the Transfer of Property Act nor by the Contract Act. The transaction is in the nature of an agreement to mortgage moveable property that may come into existence in future. We see no reason that it is not valid."

The case of Bansidhar v. Sant Lal and another, I. L. R. 10 All. 133, is another judicial pronouncement on the validity of mortgage of future indigo crops.

The case of Gyadin and others v. Kashi Gir, I. L. R. 29 All. 163, deals with mortgage of immoveable property to come into existence in future. The mortgagor, in order to pre-empt a share in a village borrowed a sum of Rs. 3,000 from the mortgagee on the security of the property he was already owner of and also the share which he was seeking to pre-empt. The mortgagor succeeded in his suit for pre-emption and the present suit was brought by the mortgagee to recover his money by the sale of the pre-empted property. The point for determination was whether the mortgage quid the pre-empted property was valid? Stanley, C. J. and Burkitt, J., observe at p. 164, "It appears to us that when the mortgagor acquired by pre-emption, and got possession of the pre-empted property, equity, treating that as done which ought to be done, gave the mortgagee a charge by way of mortgage upon the pre-empted share, and in fact, placed the Plaintiff as regards that property in the position of mortgagees."

Lastly, the case of Sukh Lal v. Bishambhar, I. L. R. 39 All. 196, is an authority for the proposition that the mortgage of offerings, receivable by a Mahabrahmin in his professional capacity is valid. The cases to be found in 7 C. L. J. 387, and I. L. R. 38 Mad. 500, will provide interesting reading on the point.

Now, let us consider some of the incidents of such transactions.

Firstly, whether it prevails against a bond fide transferee without notice?

The answer is "no," because it is only an "equitable security" and can therefore be defeated by a transferee who purchases the hypothecated property bond fide and without notice of the encumbrance over it. By purchase, the legal title passes and vests in the vendee and inasmuch as he has no notice of the existence of the encumbrance, therefore as between the mortgagee and the vendor equities being equal, the law prevails and the vendee defeats the mortgagee. But the case is otherwise, if he purchases the property with the notice of the encumbrance over it.

Secondly, in case of two mortgages created in favour of two different persons, one after the other, can the puisne encumbrancer acquire priority by taking possession of the mortgaged property as soon as it is available?

Brett and Mitra JJ.; answer this question in the negative in the case of Baldeo Parshad Sahu v. A. B. Miller, I. L. R. 31 Cal. 667. At p. 678, the learned Judges observe, "We think, it is clear that, where, as in this case, there were mortgages to the creditor of property which was to come into existence in future, and when the creditor had already paid the consideration, the property, that is to say, the indigo cakes, were bound from the moment that Mr. Wilson acquired them, and from that moment he became the trustee of the property for the creditor, who as cestui qui trust acquired an equitable estate or interest in the property. The delivery after acquisition of the cakes to the Plaintiff's servant, if there was in fact such a delivery, could not have destroyed the equitable interest of Messrs. Moran & Co., already existing in them unless, indeed the Plaintiffs were bond fide transferees for value without notice."

As a result of the various decisions, some of which have been noticed above, the following propositions may be deduced:—

(1) A valid mortgage can be created over property, moveable or immovable, which is to come into existence in future.

(2) The phraseology of the mortgage-security should be clear enough to indicate the intention to create the mortgages.

(3) The terms of the mortgage-security should not be vague, firstly, in the sense of being obscure, and indefinite so as to render identification beyond the range of probability, secondly, in the sense of embracing such a large area as to offend against public policy.

(1) The mortgage is ineffectual against a bond fide transferee without notice.

(5) The subject-matter of the mortgage should be capable of identification at the time the mortgage is sought to be enforced.

Correspondence.

To THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir, May I crave the hospitality of your columns for the purpose of discussing an important question of every day occurrence in the Civil Courts.

In Chittagong and probably in some other Districts as well, there exists the practice of signing the pleadings cross-wise in the right hand top corner at every page from start to finish. This practice does not however seem to be wholesome nor does it appear to be consistent with the law and High Court Circular and as such sometime leads to unnecessary hardship upon litigants. In Chittagong the practice is so very rigid that the Courts are almost prepared to reject the pleadings unless they bear signatures of the parties at every page. The law on this point is contained in Or. 6, r. 14 and Or. 29, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code but nowhere is it said that the pleading is to be signed at every page. A pleading is completed in the last page and if the party signs it at the end it seems sufficient. The High Court Circular is silent on the point but the practice as it obtains in the Calcutta High Court is to sign the pleadings at the bottom by the party and his pleader. The applications for certificate under Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890 and Succession Certificate Act VII of 1890 which must be signed and verified in manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure for the signing and verification of a plaint are required to be signed at the end according to set forms prescribed therefor. The head-note of Or. 29, r. 1 is "subscription and verification of pleading" and in the 1908 Edition of Woodroffe and Amir Ali's Civil Procedure Code there is a note under Or. 6, r. 14 and 15 thus, "the rule requires that the plaint as well as written statement should be subscribed by the party and his pleader if any." Now the ordinary dictionary meaning of the word "subscribe" as distinguished from "superscribe" is to sign underneath. So it does not appear that the intention of the legislature was ever to insist on the superscription or the signing of pleadings cross-wise at the right hand top corner of every page. As a practice quite inconsistent with the provisions and the spirit of law should not be allowed to continue only because it is time-honoured, it is necessary that the matter should be thoroughly ventilated with a view to its discontinuance.

Yours faithfully,
HEMENDRA NATH DUTT, B.L.,
Pleader.

Peonary Jurisdiction in Partition Suits

REPORTS (See Index.)

Ring out the old and Ring in the new.

Easter Monday, the 13th of April next, coincides this year with the last day of Bengalee year. The first day of the new year is not celebrated as a festive day in Bengal as it is in the European countries but the last day of the year is observed as such. It is observed as a gala day by the masses and the working people. But the spirit in which it is celebrated is somewhat different from the celebration of the New Year in Europe. In the West it is observed as a day for entertainment and exchange of greetings between relations and friends. The celebration commences from the previous night when the old year is rung out and the new year is rung in. Here, however, people prepare themselves for doing penance from weeks ahead. Many, specially working men, observe Sanyas, dissociate themselves from their daily occupations and their worldly surroundings, assume the garb, food and life of ascetics. They dedicate themselves to the God Siva, who is the ideal of all ascetics and is also worshipped daily in every orthodox home, who represents in himself the eternal changes in the process of evolution of life, spirit and matter in this universe. To put it shortly, he may be said to represent the spirit that is behind all cosmic changes and it must be for this reason that the close of the old year and the advent of the new is celebrated by the people pre-eminently by his worship, by the observance of asceticism, by the doing of penance and subjecting this mortal flesh to austere discipline and hardship. Early in the morn of the last day of the year, these devotees take a dip in the holy river, make a meal of fruits and feel by the end of the day that they have expiated for all their shortcomings of the closing year. The climax is marked by the charak pooja and by swinging on the sacred wheel raised aloft by a long pole fixed firmly to earth, which is emblematic of the eternal cycle. This day of penance is, however, observed by the multitude not unmingled with levity. They contribute to the public merriment by indulging in various kinds of masquerade and by caricaturing the striking events of the year and those connected with it. Such combination of penance and merriment is not unknown in England. Shrove Tuesday which was a day of penances is now celebrated in somewhat similar fashion. This shows that there is a kinship in ordinary human nature in the East and the West.

The 1st day of Byak, the New Year's day in Bengal is, however, regarded in a more matter of fact and businesslike manner. It is only the traders who celebrate it by decorating their shops, closing their old accounts and opening new ones, inviting their customers and entertaining them with light refreshment. In this respect their hospitality is not quite disinterested. It is the custom of the market, that customers visiting tradesmen's shops or sending their representatives to partake of their hospitality have to make a part payment of a small sum, usually a rupee, on the previous year's account. This serves to save limitation and the sweets that are then given are thus given not in vain. The last day of the Bengalee year is also the last day of the spring and the Bengalee new year is the first day of the summer. We note that in England the 19th April has been fixed by statute as the first day of summer, that is, only five days after Bengalee New Year's day. We wish all our readers a happy new year and many many prosperous returns of the same.

Omnipotence of Parliament.

Can the Parliament or a Legislature bind down its successor by any course of policy or legislation? The following extract from our legal contemporary will be found interesting in this connection :—

On the 10th Feb., in the House of Commons, the great constitutional doctrine of the omnipotence of Parliament and of the necessary limitation of that omnipotence was maintained and vindicated. The words of Sir William Anson and of Professor Dicey, written nearly twenty years ago, are exactly applicable to the incident. "The omnipotence of Parliament is," writes Sir William Anson, "available for change, but cannot stereotype rule of practice. Its power is a present power, but cannot be projected into the future so as to bind the same Parliament on a future day or a future Parliament." "That Parliaments" writes Professor Dicey, "have more than once intended and endeavoured to pass Acts which should tie the hands of their successors is certain, but the endeavour has always ended in failure. Of statutes intended to arrest the possible course of future legislation, the most noteworthy are the Acts which embody the treaties of Union with Ireland and Scotland." On the second reading of the Church of Scotland (Property and Endowments) Bill Mr. McLean raised a point of order which he said involved a grave constitutional issue. If the House proceeded with the consideration of this Bill, it meant, he urged, that the Treaty of Union between England and Scotland would cease to exist, and he asked the Speaker to give a ruling on the point. The Bill was an alteration in the government of the Church of Scotland and therein it violated the Act of Security and the Act of Union. The Speaker said that the House had frequently considered and adopted Bills of a similar character affecting Acts on the Statute Book, and it would be a serious thing to hold that the House was not supreme in matters of legislation. He could come to no other decision than, that the power of Parliament was supreme in the matter. In reply to a further question, the Speaker put the doctrine of Parliamentary omnipotence and its limitations concisely, thus: "What Parliament has done Parliament can undo." The provisions of the Treaty of Union with Scotland have been altered on previous occasions. The declaration of the Speaker that Parliament is supreme in legislation, emphasises the fact that the most prominent function of Parliament is legislation. The control which Parliament can exercise over affairs is at least indirect, its control over legislation is direct and absolute. Sir William Anson thus tersely describes the position: "The sovereignty of Parliament is displayed in legislation."

Saiyid Mohiuddin v. The King-Emperor, 1925 Pat. 112.

The judgment of the Patna High Court in Saiyid Mohiuddin v. The King-Emperor, 1925 Pat. 112, is in direct opposition to a series of rulings of the Calcutta High Court to which however no reference at all is made in the judgment in question. The Calcutta High Court has repeatedly laid down that the provisions of sec. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure are mandatory and must be followed and deviation therefrom renders the whole trial void. In the case in question it has been held that the filing of a written statement by the accused relieves the Magistrate from the necessity of examining the accused orally in reference to the matters elicited in the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses and that non-observance of the procedure laid down in sec. 342 does not vitiate the trial unless it is shown that the accused has been prejudiced.

Sec. 256, sub-sec. (2) provides that if the accused puts in any written statement the Magistrate shall file it with the record. An examination of secs. 255 and 256 of the Code of Criminal Procedure leaves no room for doubt that the time of taking a written statement filed by the accused synchronises with the recording of his plea. After that is done witnesses already examined by the prosecution are re-called if the accused so desires and they are cross-examined and re-examined and the evidence of the remaining witnesses for the prosecution is next taken and they are cross-examined and re-examined. At this stage the accused is to be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence. It is exactly at this stage that the Court is bound under sec. 342 to question the accused generally on the case for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. It is difficult to imagine how the filing of a written statement can relieve a Court from performing its duty which under the law it is to do at an altogether different stage of the trial, namely, after the trial has proceeded much further and the Court is in possession of the complete evidence for the prosecution.

In this country an accused is not allowed to give evidence on his own behalf and in view of this sec. 342 is of cardinal importance. There is all the difference in the world between a written statement presumably prepared by the lawyers appearing for the defence, and a statement made by the accused himself, so that the Magistrate can observe his demeanour and draw his conclusions as to the value of his statement. In this country it often happens that a prisoner is tried in a language which he cannot follow and for that reason as well as for other equally grave reasons the intention of the statute is that at a certain stage in the case the Court itself shall put aside all counsel, all pleaders, all witnesses, all representatives and shall call upon an individual accused with the authority of the Court's own voice to take advantage of the opportunity which then arises to state in his own way anything he may be desirous of stating. It is also important to have regard to the time at which this examination should take place. To ask an accused for his defence before he has the whole of the prosecution evidence in front of him is not a compliance with sec. 342 and it follows therefore that a written statement which is filed before the whole of the prosecution evidence is finished cannot take the place of the examination of the accused after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, cross-examined and re-examined. The object of the legislature in enacting sec. 342 is quite clear and the provision of the statute must be strictly enforced and the question of prejudice ought not to come in. Sec. 537 was certainly not inserted in the Code for being invoked on any and every occasion as a shield against irregularities perpetrated by the subordinate Criminal Courts. The only way to secure the proper observance of the law by the subordinate Courts is for the High Court to interfere whenever any departure from the established procedure comes to its notice. So far as sec. 342 is concerned the matter is one of paramount importance and non-compliance with it cannot be passed over on the ground of technicality.

PECUNIARY JURISDICTION IN PARTITION SUITS.

There is a conflict of rulings as to what should be considered the value of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction . . . whether it should be the value of the entire property sought to be partitioned or the value of the share of the Plaintiff in the said property. The Bombay, Madras and the Allahabad High Courts have invariably held that in a suit for partition, for the purpose of jurisdiction, the value of the suit is not that of the entire property but only of the share of the Plaintiff in the said property. The view of the Calcutta

High Court to the contrary is to be found in the recent ruling of his Lordship (Dwarkanath Chakravarti, J.) in Rajani v. Rajabala, I. L. R. 52 Cal. 128 : s.c. 29 C. W. N. 76, in which the earlier rulings are cited.

The view of the Patna High Court appears to be still unsettled. The point appears to have been debated as early as in 1920, in Dukhi v. Hanhar, 5 P. L. J. 540, also reported in 1 P. L. T. 595, and hence it is to be seen if it departs from the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court.

Lord Halsbury is reported to have once said that law was not a logical science. In Quinn v. Leatham, 1901 A. C. 495 at p. 506, his Lordship said that "a case is only an authority of what it actually decides and not for every proposition that may seem to follow logically from it." In Barindra Kumar Ghosh v. Emperor, known as the Alipur Bomb case, I. L. R. 37 Cal. 487, their Lordships observed :— "That which was an exposition of law necessary for the judgment then pronounced is not obiter dictum. It is the part of the law which is guiding the judgment and part of the law he is bound to expound in the judgment he is pronouncing."

In 5 P. L. J. 540 : s. c. 1 P. L. T. 595, the facts are that there had been a previous compromise decree for partition during the minority of the Plaintiff who challenged the validity thereof and brought the suit for an adjudication that the compromise decree was not binding upon him and that he was in joint possession, with the Defendants, of the ancestral properties, and for a declaration of his 1/8th share in the entire properties, and of his right to effect a partition thereof. It was held therein that the suit was one for declaration and consequential reliefs. The law appears to be clear as to what court-fee should be paid on such a suit and following I. L. R. 42 Cal. 370, their Lordships ruled that the court-fee payable was ad valorem on the loss to the Plaintiff. Their Lordships then ruled that in a declaratory suit which affects a decree for over Rs. 5,000, though the Plaintiff's share was below Rs. 5,000, the Plaintiff need pay court-fee on the latter amount and that the valuation for the purpose of court-fee is the same as that for purpose of jurisdiction. Thus, it is clear that this ruling is no authority for the broad proposition that the value of a suit for partition for the purpose of jurisdiction is the value of the share claimed by the Plaintiff.

In Ranajit v. M. Qasim, I. L. R. 2 Pat. 432 : s.c. 4 P. L. T. 257, their Lordships (Das and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.) in referring to 5 P. L. J., mentioned above, which they refused to follow, made the following observations :— " Their Lordships (Jwala Prosad and Adami, JJ.) held that having regard to the nature of the suit and the reliefs asked for, the value of the suit for purpose of jurisdiction was the value of the Plaintiff's share in the properties and not the value of the entire joint family property. No doubt, in considering the question as to whether the appeal lay to the High Court or to the District Court, their Lordships considered the broad proposition as to the value of suits in partition cases, but to my mind there is a distinction between suits for partition pure and simple where the Plaintiff is in joint possession of his share and there is no dispute as to his title or share, and suits where the Plaintiff seeks for an adjudication of his title or extent of share and for partition after such adjudication. In the latter case it is the value of the Plaintiff's share which will determine the jurisdiction of the Court and not the value of entire property. In the present case, there is no question as regards the title of the Plaintiffs, the only question before the Court was as regards partition; therefore the value of the whole of the properties sought to be partitioned must be the value for the purpose of jurisdiction." Their Lordships then concluded the judgment as follows :—" The Calcutta High Court has uniformly adopted this view and I (i.e., Kulwant Sahay, J., Das, J., agreeing) feel inclined to follow the same."

In I. L. R. 52 Cal. 128 : s.c. 29 C. W. N. 76 cited above, Chakravarti, J., however, came to the opposite conclusion. His Lordship observes :—" It has never been doubted that a Plaintiff can, in a partition suit, if necessary, establish his title and his right to joint possession and then if his title is good, demand in the same suit possession, not joint possession, but separate possession by partition. If this is so, the jurisdiction of the Court would be determined by the value of the entire property which is sought to be partitioned." The facts on which these observations are based are that the Plaintiff filed a plaint for partition suit in which he alleged that he was entitled to a four annas share of the family properties along with some of the Defendants. The Plaintiff further alleged that he was in possession but that a cloud had been thrown upon his title on account of a certain suit previously instituted and also on account of an erroneous record in the record-of-rights. In this ruling his Lordship pointed out a confusion of ideas, as regards ad valorem court-fees payable in certain cases of partition and the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction and observed as follows :—" But it seems to us that, in the present case, the Plaintiff had to establish his title and had to establish his right to joint possession which was denied, before he could seek partition of the property in suit. In that case, the position would be, as was laid down by their Lordships in the case of Kirty Charn Mitter v. Anath Deb, I. L. R. 8 Cal. 757, that the Plaintiff would be bound to pay ad valorem court-fee upon the value of the share that he claimed." Though in the particular case, ad valorem court-fee was paid on the Plaintiff's share, his Lordship further pointed out that that fact would not make the case triable by the Munsif, if the Plaintiff's share was within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif.

In the case of Ranajit v. Qasim, cited above, their Lordships expressly pointed out that there was no dispute as regards Plaintiff's title to partition, and if that be so, it is doubtful if that ruling may be any authority for a case like I. L. R. 52 Cal. 128 : s.c. 29 C. W. N. 76 in which such a question directly arose.

In one of the rulings of the Calcutta High Court, it was pointed out that if the value of the whole property to be partitioned was not taken to be the valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction, very large properties would be affected by the decisions of less experienced Courts. The opinion of other High Courts is to be found in I. L. R. 22 Bom. 351, 20 Mad. 289 and 24 All. 381 and need not be repeated. Like all opinions, something has to be said on both sides, and they differ. I think that an authoritative pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council or a legislative enactment should set at rest these conflicting opinions and bring about an uniformity of practice throughout India.

Preston v. Grant [1 K. B. (1925) 177]. Sale of adulterated food—Notice.

It is a matter of common experience that dealers in food-stuffs exhibit notices in their places of business to the effect that adulterated articles are sold by them. The object of these notices is to evade the statute which makes it penal for a dealer to supply a purchaser with an article other than what is demanded by him. In this city in stalls where milk is sold a notice is invariably to be found to the effect that milk adulterated with water is sold there. Is the seller protected by such a notice? This question arose in a recent case in England [Preston v. Grant, 1 K. B. (1925) p. 177]. An Inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act called at the Defendant's hotel and asked for half a pint of whisky with which he was supplied. The public analyst analysed the whisky and certified that it was under proof. The Defendant was prosecuted. It appeared that at the time of the sale a notice was exhibited at the bar and over the fire place and the notice was also exhibited in a room at the back of the bar which read as follows:—"All spirits sold in this establishment are diluted and no alcoholic strength is guaranteed." It was found that the Inspector did not observe the notice and his attention was not drawn to it, nor was he told that the spirits sold to him were sold as diluted spirits at or before the time he made the purchase. On behalf of the Defendant it was contended that he was protected by the notice, the terms of which were plain and unambiguous and which was sufficiently brought to the attention of the customer by being exhibited in the bar. Reliance was placed on Pearks, Gunston and Tee Limited v. Houghton, 1 K. B. (1902) 889. In that case the Appellants, a firm of provision merchants, displayed on the wall of their shop in a conspicuous position so as to be visible to any one entering the shop a large notice to the effect that their butter as sold at that establishment was choicest butter, blended with pure English full cream milk by new and improved machinery whereby it retained about 20 to 24 per cent. of moisture. A purchaser who did not see the notice and whose attention was not called to it bought half a pound of shilling butter which when handed to him was wrapped in two pieces of paper; on the inside wrapper was printed a notice similar to that hung up in the shop. When analysed the butter was found to contain a percentage of water which was in excess of the natural amount. Mr. Asquith who argued the case for the Appellants contended that when the seller brought to the purchaser's knowledge the fact that the article sold was not of the nature, substance or quality of the article demanded there was no offence and it was immaterial that the purchaser did not in fact see the notice. The conviction was quashed and Lord Alverston pointed out that inasmuch as the Appellants sold only one kind of butter, namely, blended butter, they were protected by the notice; but the case was different from that of a man selling various kinds of butter and putting up a notice like the one in question with a view to his protection. In the present case Lord Hewart, C. J., observed as follows:—"Here the purchaser did not observe the notice and his attention was not drawn to it. He got something different from what he demanded, whereas in Pearks, Gunston and Tee v. Houghton, the purchaser got the article which he demanded, namely, blended butter. The whole question is whether the Respondent was protected by the notices. In my opinion he was not so protected. There is no such thing as constructive notice in a case of this kind. Each purchase is an isolated transaction and if the seller chooses to have recourse to a general warning he runs the risk of being unprotected owing to the notice not reaching the particular purchaser. Where a sale has taken place of an article of food which is not of the nature, substance and quality demanded the presumption that the purchaser has been prejudiced is not rebutted by proof of the existence of a notice which he did not see and to which his attention was not called."

(Contributed.)

I

Everyone interested in the moral and the economic progress of the country, will feel grateful to the Civil Justice Committee for the infinite pains they have taken, the innumerable measures of reform suggested and for the deep sympathy for the litigant public and the witnesses they have shown. Thoroughness can never be claimed in a work of this nature, nor are the measures formulated in a final shape. But they are exceedingly valuable as showing us the lines in which changes ought to take place. The detailed workings must be left to the different High Courts, the executive governments of the different provinces and the different legislatures.

In these articles, I must confine myself to an examination of the more important points which have special application in Bengal. A detailed examination will be undesirable and uninteresting. I propose to start from the bottom of the judicial organisation.

The Committee have recommended amalgamation of all Munsifs' offices located at one station, and their being placed in charge of a Munsif, to be styled the Sub-Divisional Munsif, who will receive all plaints and applications and will distribute the contested work among his colleagues. Members of the service may not unlikely resent this assertion of authority by those who erstwhile had held the same position as they. But the present system is not only uneconomical, but has been mainly responsible for that laxity in control over the subordinate staff and that weakness in dealing with abuses of the legal procedure, which have become a reproach to the subordinate judiciary. Among a people who are by habit and by tradition unpunctual and lax in their thoughts and habits, none but lax officers can command popularity. If there are three or four judicial officers at a station, a loose practice introduced in one Court is invariably found to re-act on the practice and procedure in the other Courts and the officer who is inclined to be strict finds the practices of the other Courts a serious handicap to his work.

The present system has been responsible for unequal distribution of work and for serious waste of a judicial officer's time. The local Sub-Divisional Munsif will be in a better position to judge of the quantity and the relative complexity of the work of his colleagues than the District Judge who lives far off.

The initiation of this reform may be affected merely by administrative action of the Local Government. Under the powers vested in it under the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887, all Munsifs' Courts at each station, with the exception of one in each may be abolished, the senior Munsif at each station may be placed in charge of that Court, and all the other officers may be appointed additional Munsifs. The immediate effect will be amalgamation of all work in a single Court, which can distribute work amongst others. In the Central Provinces this system has worked very satisfactorily. In fact this is the practice in places where several District Judges work and in a modified form this is the practice of the Calcutta High Court.

The proposal for appointment of a judicial officer in each District as Registrar of the District Judge's Court, will relieve the District Judges of minor administrative work and will enable them to exercise proper supervision over subordinate Courts and personal attention over important administrative matters. This measure need not require any additional expense. If the Courts at each place are amalgamated and if the outlying Munsifs known as "choukis" be amalgamated with the Sub-Divisional Courts, twenty-six officers can easily be found for the twenty-six Districts out of a total cadre of about 260.

When communications were very difficult, roads were unsafe, and the pay of a Munsif was Rs. 50, that of a clerk Rs. 10, the location of Courts in outlying places was a justifiable administrative measure. It did not matter much if the judicial officer was employed half-time or one-quarter of the time. Now, that communications have almost everywhere improved, and the pay of officers has increased several times, the waste of time which takes place in most "choukis" is a matter of serious concern to the public. Moreover the administration is at its worst in these places. The prospects there are insufficient to attract the more promising lawyers. The weight of technicality, the laxity in practices and the weakness of the Judge are at their highest in those places. The Committee have therefore approved of the tendency in recent years to amalgamate these "choukiss" with Sub-Divisional or District Courts (vide p. 454). This reform is very urgently needed.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

LORD SHAW, LORD CARSON, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI continued to hear Indian appeals as follows:—

Feb. 19th.—Neki v. Chhajja Ram (Lahore). This appeal came before the Privy Council in 1922 when the Board pronounced judgment dealing mainly with procedure. The appeal was then ex parte, the present Appellant being unrepresented. (See 26 C. W. N. 697.) Mr. Parikh for the Appellant now sought to have a decision on the merits under which he claimed to be entitled to pre-emption. Sir Geo. Lowndes and Mr. Douglas McNair raised a preliminary objection that the appeal did not lie as the order in Council in conformity with the judgment of their Lordships had "dismissed the suit." The objection was upheld and the appeal dismissed.

Feb. 19th.—Rajendra Naram Singh v. Sunder Bibi (Allahabad). In this appeal the sole question for decision was whether the rights of the Appellant in the property attached were protected from attachment under cl. (a) of sec. 60 of the C. P. C., as being a "right to future maintenance."

The Board were of opinion that the Appellant's interest in the attached properties was saleable but they modified the decree of the High Court.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham for the Respondent.

Feb. 19th and 20th.—Gajadhar Mahton v. Ambika Prosad Tewari. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh appeared ex parte for the Appellants who had instituted a suit to enforce a mortgage. The decree under appeal had dismissed the suit on the ground that the money had been borrowed without legal necessity.

The Appellants now contended that they were in any event entitled to recover on the personal covenant and alleged an acknowledgment which prevented a bar by limitation. Judgment was reserved.

Feb. 20th.—In Yarlagadda Mallikarjuna Prasada v. Renduchintala Subbaya (Madras), Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham appeared for the Appellants ex parte. The Appellant sued for the recovery of lands in the possession of the Respondents.

He alleged that the Respondents were lessees whose tenancy had expired. The latter contended that the lands were ryoti lands and not the home farm lands of the Plaintiff. The Appellate Court had decided in favour of the tenants as regards portion of the lands but had given the Plaintiff a decree for banjar lands.

Feb. 23rd.—The hearing was commenced of Forbes v. Ralli Bros., which is concerned with the construction of a lease of property in Sul-tangum. The Appellant gave notice to terminate the tenancy. The Respondents contended that their lease is permanent and plead estoppel.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.

Sir J. Simon, K. C., Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Respondents.

Feb. 23rd.—Adappa v. Gundappa. Judgment was delivered by MR. AMEER ALI, the appeal being dismissed with costs.

The following petitions were presented:

Gaya Din Singh v. Dhanpat Singh (Allahabad).

Mr. I. Majid applied for special leave to appeal in forma pauperis. Leave was refused.

Odoy Ram Kishan Lal v. Phool Chand (Lahore).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach applied for special leave to appeal. The case referred to a breach of contract for the sale of goods, delivery being given in bales in lieu of cases. They contended that there was a question of law on the construction of the correspondence which entitled them to appeal although both lower Courts had found against them. Leave was refused.

Ramdeo Baboona v. Bheeraj Babulal (Allahabad).

Mr. W. Wallach applied for special leave to appeal. Leave was granted.

Feb. 25th. — Before LORDS DUNEDIN and SHAW and SIR J. EDGE.

An application was made in Musammat Lajwanti v. Saja Chand by Mr. W. Wallach for rectification of the order in Council. The question at issue was whether the Appellant had obtained a decree for herself or for her assignees as well. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and S. Hyam opposed the application. Their Lordships took time to consider their decision.

Feb. 25th. — Before VISCOUNT HALDANE, LORD DUNEDIN and SIR J. EDGE.

In Debi Charan v. King-Emperor, Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Parikh for the Applicant laid the matter before their Lordships and said they could not urge any justification for asking for leave to appeal to His Majesty which would come within the principles laid down by the Board.

The application was dismissed, LORD DUNEDIN remarking that the attitude of Counsel was most proper, that the Board shared with them the responsibility in dismissing such an application, but in the circumstances it was clear that no fundamental principle had been violated so as to justify them in advising His Majesty to consider the appeal.

Feb. 25th. — In Begu v. King-Emperor, Mr. W. Wallach had obtained special leave to appeal in this case from a decision of the Lahore High Court. He contended that the accused had been convicted of an offence with which they had never been charged. They were committed under sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and were convicted under sec. 201.

A further plea had been urged that the opinion of the assessors had not been obtained and recorded in the manner prescribed by sec. 309 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Crown were not called upon and the appeal was dismissed.

In the judgment which was delivered by LORD HALDANE it was stated that no violation of the principles of natural justice had been established so as to justify interference with the decision of the Indian Courts.

The Board has now commenced the hearing of Canadian appeals and it is probable that no Indian appeals will be heard for the next 10 days.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported
(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SUBHAWARDY AND DUVAL, JJ. S. A. No. 1499 OF 1922. GAGENDRANARAYAN MAITY, Appellant v. SIBANATH DAS, Respondent. The 7th April 1925.
Tender—No deposit in Court—Interest.

The appeal was by the Plaintiff in a suit on hand-note, dated the 4th April 1916, for Rs. 350 bearing interest at 36 per cent. Defendant admitted execution of the note of hand and receipt of the money but pleaded that the amount due was tendered by money-order on 15th July 1916 which, however, was refused. The suit was instituted on 8th January 1920 and under the circumstances Defendant claimed exemption from payment of costs of the suit as also interest from the said date of tender.

The first Court decreed the suit in its entirety holding that the tender had not been kept good as the amount was not deposited in Court. On appeal it was held that the tender was good and sufficient but inasmuch as money was not deposited the Court allowed interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from July 1916 to the date of the institution of the suit.

On appeal it was urged that the Defendant not having deposited the amount alleged to have been tendered before action after the suit was instituted, the plea of tender was not available to him; and that the Court was not justified in reducing the contract rate for the period between 16th July and the date of the suit.

Held—Distinguishing and differing from 16 Bom. 141 and 38 Mad. 959 at p. 970 and approving of the observations of Mookerjee, J., in 34 Cal. 305, that the rule that the plea of tender is not available for defence if the amount tendered before action is not followed by deposit after action, is a rule of English law and the same has not been incorporated in Indian law, and the Court was justified in allowing interest at 6 per cent. for the period after tender to the date of the suit which was allowed by way of equitable compensation.

The appeal was dismissed with costs.

Messrs. Satya Charan Sinha and Mahendra Nath Ghose for the Appellant.

Mr. Apurba Charan Mukherji for the Respondent.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Is a member of Parliament representative of the whole electorate?

On the 20th of February last a very interesting discussion took place in the House of Commons, in connection with the Representation of the People Bill, as to how far a member of Parliament may, at any time, be said to be truly representative of his constituency. The fact that he is returned by a majority may in itself be said to take away from him such a representative character of the whole electorate. He is there by the choice of the majority. The control that his constituency possesses over him is that when he may have occasion to seek re-election, the majority, though not identical with the previous one, may disapprove of his work, policy or principle in Parliament and refuse to re-elect him. So the responsibility for his action in Parliament is partly personal and only partly representative. The following considerations will also show that he cannot at any time be said to be representative of the whole electorate:—

Mr. Whiteley, on the 20th Feb., in moving the second reading of the Representation of the People Bill, which seeks to extend the franchise to women at the age of twenty one on the same terms as now apply to men, referred casually, in the course of his speech, to a matter which lies near the seat of Parliamentary life and exercises an influence little, if at all, publicly acknowledged, but of incalculable power on the existence of a Parliament. Referring to the position assumed by the opponents of the Bill, that a matter so serious as that to which the Bill relates should not be taken into consideration in the early days of a Parliament but in its dying days, so that the Bill could be followed by a new election for a new Parliament, Mr. Whiteley said he was not sure that the House of Commons could be said, at any time, actually to represent the whole of the electorate. Additional voters were placed on the register every six months, which meant that, in reality, hon. members never really represented the new thought and the new opinion which was coming on the register. An observer so acute, and with an experience so exceptional, of the working of our Parliamentary institutions as the late Sir William Anson, writing in 1907, comes very definitely to the conclusion that, far from the House of Commons representing the whole of the electorate for any definite time, few members of that House can be confidently said to represent for any definite term the constituencies by whom they were elected. Sir William Anson thus expounds and explains this position, which, he says, is a large factor in constituting the Government, through the power of dissolution, the master of the House of Commons: "The weapon," he writes, "by which the Prime Minister or the Cabinet enforces its will upon the Commons is the threat of a dissolution. The mere intimation that if the necessary support is not given to a Government, its careless and lukewarm supporters may be sent to explain their conduct to their constituents has been known to produce the desired results. But why is it so effective? Why cannot the candidate plead his own merits, explain the causes of his conduct, and satisfy his constituents of his loyalty to the principles which he has professed? Sir William Anson replies to the question in the words of Sir Sidney Low: "It follows also," writes Sir Sidney Low, "that one cannot at any given moment, except in the few months immediately succeeding a general election, say that the House of Commons represents the opinion of even the majority of the electorate. It may have done so, roughly speaking, when it was chosen; but it may have lost the character long before it has seemed fit to the Premier to recommend a dissolution." Low Times

True character of the claim in a suit for assessment of fair rent—Compensation for use and occupation.

In Partap Mahtoh, v. Musst. Wajirunnissa, reported in [1925 Pat.] at p. 125 a Division Bench of the Patna High Court has expressed the opinion, following a similar opinion expressed by a Judge of the same Court in Gobind Lal v. Ram Saran, 2 P. J. T. 642, that "a suit for the determination of a fair and equitable rent proceeds on the assumption that no rent has hitherto been paid by the tenant, and

When a landlord claims fair rent in respect of past years for which rent has already accrued due, a suit for determination of fair and equitable rent does not lie." The implication apparently is that the tenant in occupation of land with the landlord's permission, when a contract to pay an agreed rent is not established, does not become liable to pay for his use and occupation of the land unless and until the Court has been invited to and has by its decree determined what that compensation should be. This implication or assumption, we respectfully submit, is not sound in law. A suit for assessment of rent in the occupation of a tenant, their Lordships have rightly observed in their judgment, is not an act authorised by the Bengal Tenancy Act within the meaning of sec. 188 of that Act. It lies under the general law and is only another name for the common law action for compensation for use and occupation. A contract to pay a fair compensation for use and occupation is implied by law from the fact that land or premises belonging to the Plaintiff has been occupied by the Defendant by the Plaintiff's permission, the amount of compensation depending on the value of the premises and on the duration of the occupation. As soon as the occupation ceases, the implied contract ceases (Gibson v. Kerk, 1 Q. B. 850; Churchward v. Ford, 2 H. & N. 446; Sloper v. Saunders, 26 L. J. Ex. 276). The action is based on occupation, and it is the occupation which gives rise to the cause of action and not the evaluation of the compensation on a subsequent date by the Court. As the landlords can only claim to recover for the period of occupation, it would seem to follow (assuming that the view expressed by their Lordships of the Patna High Court is correct) that if the tenant left before the Court has made its decree in a suit for assessment of rent, the decree would be infructuous and a brutum fulmen for all purposes. This, it is respectfully submitted, cannot be and is not the law. Provided the claim is not barred by limitation, a suit for compensation for use and occupation for the period of occupation may be brought and will be decreed even after the tenant has left. A fortiori, if the tenant is still in possession, a decree will be passed in the landlord's favour for such period before the date of the institution of the suit as falls within the period of limitation. Art. 116 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act would appear to govern such a suit, though the residuary article (Art. 120) has been applied by the Calcutta High Court in an old case (18 W. R. 132; but see 7 M. L. T. 419). The observation under consideration is in the nature of an obiter dictum, the suit having been dismissed by their Lordships on another perfectly valid ground. But the matter is of such general importance that we have left the necessity of subjecting the proposition to a more searching examination that might at first sight appear to be necessary.

Measure of damages in torts due to negligence—"Natural and probable consequences."

In a recent issue of the Minnesota Law Review—the receipt of which we acknowledge with pleasure—there is an interesting note on "proximate cause" in relation to the question of tortious negligence—specially when there intervenes another agency between the act or omission of the Defendant and the ultimate injury for which damage is claimed. It is said that liability for a negligent act extends to consequences which might have been reasonably foreseen or anticipated from the commission of the act. In regard to torts not founded on negligence, on the other hand, the proposition usually met with is that the Defendant is responsible for the natural and reasonable consequences of his act. To say that a person is responsible for the natural and probable consequences of his act, which is the test usually propounded in cases of negligence, is not the same thing as to say that he is responsible for the natural and reasonable consequences of his act. It is a question whether the statement that in cases of negligence, the Defendant is liable for the probable consequences (that is to say, the consequences which might reasonably be anticipated) is not due to a confusion arising from importing the test which is applied in determining the existence of the negligence to the ascertainment of the measure of damages, for negligence itself consists in a failure to anticipate the reasonable consequences of one's act. We think the test of "probable consequences" is available only to determine whether the case is one of tortious negligence or a mere accident. Once negligence is proved by the application of this test, the criterion for determining the measure of damages is the same in cases of negligent and intentional torts. In other words, we agree with those decisions which hold that once negligence is established, the Defendant is liable for all the natural and reasonable consequences of his act, whether these could reasonably have been foreseen or not. •

UNDER-RAIYATS

BAGERHAT.

Under cl. (a) of sec. 18 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, wide powers of transfer are given to a raiyat holding at a rent or rate of rent fixed in perpetuity. He can transfer his holding in the same way as a permanent tenure-holder can do. This raises the question whether he can transfer his holding permanently or for a period of more than nine years in the face of the provision laid down in cl. (2) of sec. 85. Or whether the word "transfer" in cl. (a) of sec. 18 includes a "lease." It has been held in 25 C. W. N. 9, following 19 C. W. N. 1127, that the word "transfer" in sec. 18 includes a "lease" and sec. 85 incorporated under the miscellaneous provisions of Chap. IX cannot curtail the powers of the raiyat under sec. 18.

Now, suppose a raiyat holding at a rent or rate of rent fixed in perpetuity grants a permanent lease to a tenant. What are the incidents of such a tenancy? His lease, being of a permanent character, cannot be avoided by his landlord by any procedure under sec. 49, although his status is no better than that of an under-raiyat. But all the same, though he is a permanent lessee, he may be ejected for arrears of rent under sec. 66. All the provisions of an under-raiyati tenancy will be applicable to him save that he is not liable to be ejected under sec. 49 by his landlord. Moreover, the principle laid down in 25 C. W. N. 5 (F. B.) will invoke the doctrine of estoppel against him. This leads us to the further inquiry, what is the distinction between a permanent tenant under a raiyat holding at a rent or rate of rent fixed in perpetuity and a tenant under an occupancy raiyat who has got a registered lease purported to be of a permanent character granted by his landlord who professes on the face of the document to have a higher status than that of a raiyat. The distinction between the two classes of leases is practically none. Both the classes of tenants can, according to the principle laid down in the Full Bench ruling just cited, invoke the doctrine of estoppel against their landlords in a suit for ejectment under sec. 49.

Thus wise landlords who are occupancy raiyats can enjoy similar powers of transfer like a raiyat holding at a rent or rate of rent fixed in perpetuity by having recourse to a little manipulation. Hence we see that both the raiyat holding at a rent or rate of rent fixed in perpetuity and an occupancy raiyat can practically defeat the provisions of cl. (a) of sec. 49 by granting permanent leases to their tenants.

Now the question is whether under-raiyats including the above two classes of lessees can acquire the right of occupancy in their tenancies. Secs. 183 and 113 indicate that they can acquire the right of occupancy. Sec. 113, as it stood before the passing of the Bengal Act, III of 1898, did not enact any restriction of time-limit as regards enhancement of rent of under-raiyati tenancies after rent had been settled under Chap. X. Landlords of under-raiyats enjoyed unfettered powers of enhancement of rent possible under the Act. But now under the present Code when the rent of a tenancy is settled under Chap. X, under-raiyats having a right of occupancy are immune from enhancement of rent for five years under sec. 113, save in the case of exceptions mentioned therein. It is consequently clear that where by custom, usage or customary right, an under-raiyat has acquired a right of occupancy in his tenancy, he cannot be ejected under sec. 49. And so it was held by Fletcher, J., in 22 C. W. N. 519, in spite of the strenuous argument to the contrary by the commentator of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But such a tenant by the fact of his having acquired a right of occupancy is not converted into an occupancy raiyat and does not acquire the status of an occupancy raiyat. This view was endorsed by Das and Adami, JJ., in 75 I. C. 427.

Settlement operations under Chap. X are going on in the District of Khulna. Large number of under-raiyats, from their long occupation and other incidents, are being recorded as under-raiyats having occupancy rights. They are not liable to be ejected under sec. 49 by their landlords. They will remain in occupation of their tenancies so long as they duly pay rent to their landlords. But as they are no better than under-raiyats, all the other incidents of under-raiyati tenancies will apply to their tenancies. They are liable to be ejected for arrears of rent under sec. 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Decrees for arrears of rent against them are money-decrees and their tenancies may be sold in execution of such decrees by following the procedure under the Civil Procedure Code. But the use of the word "holding" in the expression "the holding of an under-raiyat having occupancy rights" in sec. 113, may lend to the view that an under-raiyat may acquire the higher status of a raiyat as the tenancy of a raiyat is called a "holding." But that is not so. This is evident from the use of the word "holding" in the same section in the expression "the holding of an under-raiyat not having occupancy rights." It is apparent that by this indiscriminate use of the word "holding," the legislature intended to mean nothing more than a "tenancy."

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Mar. 5th.—No Indian appeals were heard for a week but the Canadian list having been disposed of, Indian appeals are once again occupying the attention of the Board.

Mar. 5th and 6th.—Udaychand Pannalal v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., an application for special leave to appeal from Bengal was heard by VISCOUNT HALDANE, LORD DUNEDIN and LORD DARLING.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh represented the Applicants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes were for the Respondents.

The disputes arose under contracts for the sale of jute. Abortive arbitrations followed, and a suit was brought by the applicants, that suit was stayed and fresh arbitration proceedings were commenced which resulted in 2 ex parte awards, one in favour of the applicant for 80,000 and the other in favour of the Opposite Party for 4,000. The former award was set aside by the Courts and the Plaintiffs sued unsuccessfully to set aside the latter award. Having failed in the High Court they sought leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee on the ground that although directly they seek to set aside a decree for only 4,000 indirectly their cross-claim for the 80,000 awarded to them is effected. Leave was refused by SIR L. SANDERSON, C. J. and WALMSLEY, J., who held that there was no claim or question respecting "property" within the meaning of the second clause of sec. 110 of the C. P. Code.

The application is one of considerable importance and will be fully reported later.

Mar. 6th.—Upennaga Kamaraju v. Y. Lakshminikantam (Madras), Mr. W. Wallach applied for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Narasimham opposed.

Leave was refused.

Mar. 6th.—Bhugwan Singh v. Khedu Singh (Central Provinces).

Mr. E. B. Raikes applied for special leave to appeal.

The suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bilaspur for possession of a village and of a house as an appanage to that village. For the purpose of court-fee the Plaintiff valued his claim at 5 times the revenue payable for the village and house, viz., Rs. 4,550. The trial Court decreed the claim for the village but dismissed the claim for the house. On appeal the District Court decreed the claim in full. On second appeal the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, varied that decree, and refused leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the suit had been valued at under 10,000 and had been instituted in a Court with limited jurisdiction.

For the applicant it was urged that under-valuation for court-fees did not preclude an appeal to the Privy Council if the Appellant could show that the real value was over Rs. 10,000. Reference was made to Babu Lakraj Roy v. Kanhya Singh, L. R. 1st Ind. App. 317 and Lachappa Subbaraj v. Shidappa V. Jadhav, L. R. 26 I. A. 24. Leave was granted.

Mar. 6th.—Sura Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandarama Pillai (Madras).

This was an application for rehearing of an appeal on the ground that the "next friend of the applicant who was a minor, had absconded and the appeal had been heard ex parte."

Mr. Narasimham for the Applicant.

Mr. Raikes for the Opposite Party.

Leave to enter appearance was granted on condition that the applicant paid all costs of the abortive hearing and of the application.

Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law.

The Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law for February, which we received just before the Easter Vacation, contains some very interesting articles and notes. It opens with an article on the "Privy Council and the Colonies." It deals with the executive functions that the Privy Council used to exercise in the past in respect of the Colonies before the self-governing ones attained the Dominion status. In the name of superintendence, the policy of the Privy Council was one of interference and domination over the Colonies. It is well-known that the Dominion Governments within the British Empire now regard themselves as perfectly autonomous states and even resent being committed to any course of foreign policy without their express consent. For instance, Canada has not ratified the Lausanne Treaty or accepted the trade relations established by the British Government with Russia as binding on her. She entered protest for not being consulted in the latter case and the British Government expressed their regret and assured her that there would be no repetition of it. The Dominion Prime Ministers now demand that they should have direct dealings with the Prime Minister of England and not through the Colonial Secretary as before. The Prime Minister of England is, however, too busy with the affairs of domestic and foreign policy of various kinds and is not likely to find time to have direct dealings with the Dominions as well. So the writer vaguely suggests, if the President of the Privy Council may not be appointed a Minister for such purposes, but he doubts if that will satisfy the Dominions. We are afraid it would not and before long the Commonwealths within the British Empire will acquire international status of their own and their relationship with the mother country will be more or less in the nature of an alliance on terms of mutuality and common interest. Amongst the other articles of interest the one on the "Constitution of Iraq" is very interesting in view of the consideration that the question is likely to receive the attention of the League of Nations in the near future. Amongst the notes, that on the "Sidelights on the Crisis in India" by Mr. H. Harcourt (Longmans Green & Co.) will be found of interest by readers in this country in so far as attempts have been made there to controvert the home truth that "between Europeans and Indians it is futile to expect justice in Criminal Courts."

Statements of witnesses recorded by the police.

Sec. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as it now stands, differs materially from the corresponding section of the Code before the amendment of 1923. The law as it stood before enjoined that no statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation if taken down in writing was to be signed by the person making it and such writing was not to be used as evidence. It is now laid down that such statement shall not be used for any purpose at any enquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made, the only exception to this rule being the case contemplated by the proviso and it is here that the substantial alteration has been made by Act XVIII of 1923. The proviso to the old section was to the effect that "when any witness is called for the prosecution whose statement has been taken down in writing (by a police officer) the Court shall on the request of the accused refer to such writing and may then, if the Court thinks it expedient in the interests of justice, direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof: and such statement may be used to impeach the credit of such witness in manner provided by the Indian Evidence Act, 1872."

Thus it was entirely left to the discretion of the Court whether or not to allow the accused to have a copy of the statement recorded by the police officer and the use of the statement for contradicting the witness under sec. 145 of the Evidence Act was permissible. Under the law as it now stands the Court is bound on the request of the accused to refer to the writing and to furnish the accused with a copy thereof in order that any part of such statement, if duly proved, may be used to contradict the witness under sec. 145 of the Evidence Act. It is likely to be, as it was in a recent case which came up to the Lahore High Court (Labh Sing v. Crown, 6 Lahore 24), overlooked that the record of the previous statement made by the witness to the police must be duly proved before any use could be made of it for the purpose of contradicting him. What generally happens is that the investigating police officer is called with his diary, he is asked if he examined a particular witness in the course of the investigation and whether he took down any statement made by him. The answer, if it is in the affirmative, gives the accused the right to ask for a copy of the statement and when the particular witness is cross-examined the necessary portion of the statement is put to him for the purpose of contradicting him.

In the procedure described there is a gap which renders the evidence of the police officer inadmissible and in the case referred to above it is pointed out that the police officer must say that the statements, the record of which has been placed on the record, are those which he recorded. This is the necessary consequence of the introduction of the words "if duly proved" in the section as it now stands. The learned Judges observe that there is no presumption as to the genuineness of the statements of witnesses entered in the police diaries and unless they are duly proved the evidence given in Court cannot be contradicted by them.

Turkish legislation for controlling marriage expenses.

The Industrial and Trade Review of India published by some Indians resident in Berlin notices the social legislation that has been recommended by the Executive Government in Turkey for checking the extravagance which is so common in Oriental Countries in connection with marriages. The orthodox communities in India may take a leaf out of this proposed social legislation in Turkey. The custom in India that every girl is to be married has in these mercenary days afforded an opportunity to the bridegroom or his guardians to fleece the father of the bride to such an extent as to bring ruin on his family. It would seem that such exactions cannot be put an end to except by legislation. The Government here would not interfere in social and religious matters but we are not so sure that when the local and central legislature are more representative of the people, they would not, if we do not put our houses in order before that. Our contemporary says:—

In view of the prodigious waste of money on marriage ceremonies both among the Hindus and the Mohammedans of India, and of the debts and other scandals connected therewith, attention should be drawn to the fight which our progressive Turkish friends are putting up against similar evils in their own country. The Turkish Minister of the Interior has ordered the Governors of the Provinces of Constantinople to take the severest measures against extravagance, in order to put down the luxury which is gaining the upper hand in the old capital. A Commission of Enquiry appointed for this purpose has drawn up a bill which defines the exact limits of the expenditure of the richer citizens on occasions of marriage and other family festivities. For example, a bridegroom is not permitted to present to his future wife a ring of a higher value than 20 Turkish Pounds. No other present besides the ring is permitted. The trousseau of the young bride is not allowed to exceed two dresses. She is not permitted to take to the house of her husband more furniture than is necessary for furnishing one room. All the other usual pomp and ceremony connected with marriages is once and for all strictly forbidden.

GLIMPSES INTO THE CONSTITUTION OF IRAQ.

The status of Iraq (Mesopotamia) at the present moment seems to be somewhat curious. It originally formed a part of the Turkish Empire. The Covenant of the League of Nations placed Palestine and Iraq, where Arab population preponderates, under 'A' mandate, as states whose independence may be provisionally recognised, subject to the rendering of advice by a mandatory; which in both cases is Great Britain. The authority and control to be exercised by the mandatory in Iraq is to be defined by the League of Nations. Formerly it was contemplated that Iraq would remain for an indefinite period under the mandate of Great Britain. A draft constitution was prepared in 1921 but the Council of the League did not confirm it. The League only gave permission to carry on the administration provisionally under the draft. The League at the same time directed the mandatory to frame within the shortest possible time, not exceeding three years, an Organic Law for Mesopotamia (Iraq) for the approval of the League with a view to facilitate the progressive development of Mesopotamia as an independent state. After Amir Faisal was elected by the Arabs as King of Iraq, the present relationship between Iraq and Great Britain is regulated by a provisional treaty and an agreement under which the latter undertakes to render such assistance and support as may be required by the former and Iraq undertakes to accept such advice from the British High Commissioner as would enable Great Britain to fulfil her obligations to the League. A constituent assembly elected by universal suffrage, the members of which, with the exception of a few who had served as Turkish Deputies under the old régime, were all devoid of any legal or political training, sat in Bagdad in July 1924, ratified the above treaty and agreement and passed a constitution, clause by clause, which though framed on the lines of constitutional freedom of Western nations, contains some anomalies of the type to be met within the Montague-Chelmsford Constitution for India. It opens with a declaration of the "rights of man," which is borrowed from the provision in this behalf in the Egyptian constitution. The following summary given in the Journal of the Society of Comparative Legislation would give a fair idea of it:—

The clauses defining "the rights of man" which are usual in foreign constitutions are reproduced in the regular form of a sweeping principle qualified by legal restriction. Thus, nobody may be arrested or put in prison, except in accordance with the prescriptions of the law. The domicile is inviolable, except that a search may be carried out in the cases prescribed by law. Correspondence is secret, except in cases prescribed by law. The Press is free within the limits traced by the law, and the preventive censorship is forbidden. The right of teaching is free, provided that the teaching is not contrary to public order. The right of association is granted, subject to the control of the law.

After the above it is rather curious to notice that Art. 26 (c) has a family likeness to provisions in the Government of India Act of 1919, regarding the power of the Executive Government to override by certification and ordinances the decision of the legislature with regard to the budget and legislation which may run counter to treaty obligations or be prejudicial to peace and order. The following observations in the Journal regarding the necessity of such safeguards against the action of an untrained and unmanageable chamber will be read with interest in India:—

Art. 26 (c) gives to the King power, when Parliament is not sitting, to make, with the concurrence of the Cabinet, ordinances which shall have the force of law. This may be done when urgent measures are necessary for the maintenance of public order and security, for repelling a public danger, for expenditure not sanctioned by the budget or by special law, and for securing the fulfilment of treaty obligation. All such measures, with the important exception of the last mentioned, must be submitted to Parliament at the beginning of its session, and, if not accepted, the ordinance becomes invalid from the date of a government notification to that effect. The result is that, given the King's power to prorogue and dissolve Parliament, the King and his Ministers could, in the teeth of an unmanageable Chamber, provide for necessary supplies or decree the legislation necessary to implement treaty obligation.

While the Iraq Assembly passed the above clause unanimously, it is, indeed, very interesting to learn that the members, mostly composed of unruly Arabs and Kurds, put up a tough fight against any foreigners being employed in Government service except a few under treaty obligations. The learned contributor of the article in the Journal makes the following observation in this connection:—

Art. 18 secures to Iraq exclusively all government appointments "except in exceptional circumstances, which shall be prescribed in a special law, and except in the case of foreigners, who may or shall be employed under Treaties or Agreements." This clause evoked acrimonious discussion in the Constituent Assembly, the exclusive right to patronage and to the emoluments of government employment being regarded by Oriental patriots as the supreme prize of natural independence. The exception at the end was grudgingly inserted, only because of the obligation contained in the agreement to employ a limited number of British officials, which is annexed to the Treaty.

The policy of the League in respect of Iraq, Arabia, Palestine and Syria would be to set them up as independent Arab States, with some treaty obligations with the allies for the preservation of peace in the near and far East. The Arabs do not care to remain under the over-lordship of Turkey or of any European power and this attempt at setting up of the independent Arab States will be a very interesting study in the maintenance of the balance of power in Europe and Asia.

THE MEANING OF "COUNSEL."

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
SIR,

On Wednesday last, an advocate enrolled under the new Rules in filing terms of compromise of a case before Mr. Justice Gregory, signed the terms as "Counsel." On this an objection was taken by the Barrister on the other side to the advocate describing himself as "Counsel" and Mr. Justice Gregory gave effect to the contention so far as to ask the learned advocate to change the subscription.

There is no authority whatsoever for the proposition that Counsel means only a Barrister. Even in England where Barristers alone are ordinarily entitled to act as Counsel, where attorneys are given the right to appear before a Court as advocates they are properly described as Counsel (see 28 & 29 Vict., c. 18, sec. 9). The word only means a person who has the right to plead before a Court on behalf of a client.

Whatever doubts may exist as regards the English practice, there can be no manner of doubt that in India Barristers cannot claim the exclusive right to be described as Counsel. A glance at the Rules of the High Court (Original Side) would have been enough to convince the learned lawyers who were responsible for the incident of Wednesday last that under those Rules Counsel includes an advocate who is not a Barrister. At various places those Rules refer to Counsel, notably in the chapter on Taxation. Is it contended that all those Rules apply exclusively to Barristers? The supposition is too ridiculous. If the Barristers want to distinguish themselves from other advocates of the High Court, they can fall back upon their designation as Barristers. Having regard to the frame of the High Court Rules as they stand, it would be impossible to make out their exclusive title to the term, "Counsel." No doubt the Rules can be changed, but until they are so changed, "Counsel" must be read as synonymous with advocates.

The distinction claimed is puerile and but for blind prejudice the learned Counsel could not have put forward an argument which was as undignified as it was ill-informed.

I hope we shall hear no more of such objections in future.

I am, etc.,
N. C. SEN-GUPTA.

Review.

LAW OF CONFESSIONS. By S. Roy, published by the Eastern Law House, Calcutta. Price Rs. 6.

New editions of Mr. Roy's books are always welcome, for in every subsequent edition the usefulness of the books is considerably enhanced. We have before us the fifth edition of Mr. Roy's well-known book on confessions which has been very much enlarged and carefully brought up to date. The whole law on the subject has been exhaustively dealt with and all circular orders and notifications of the High Court and the Government dealing with the recording of confessions, which after all is a matter in connection with which the greatest caution should always be observed, have been collected and inserted in appropriate places. The notes in some places might have been condensed a little more but having regard to the importance of the subject dealt with an elaborate treatment is perhaps desirable.

The Reminiscences of Sir Surendranath Banerjea.

Sir Surendranath Banerjea's Reminiscences, which at the request of the publishers have been styled, "A Nation in Making", are replete with sketches from life more fascinating than romance. The rhythm and flow of language and the elegance of style are all his own. He has been a prolific writer and a much more of a speaker than even a writer all his life. His life is crowded with events the like of which is seldom to be met with in the career of an ordinary man. Yet the brevity with which he has dealt with them, the light touches with which he has passed over incidents over which he might have devoted pages, the little that he has said about them and the lot that he has left unsaid, make his writings a real work of art. It seems that Providence had thrown obstacles in his way from early life as if to test how he would surmount them with the talent, energy, zeal and robust self-confidence with which nature had endowed him. After having passed the Indian Civil Service Examination, his name was officially published amongst the successful candidates. But, soon after, his name was mysteriously removed from the list in consequence of some anonymous communication. How many when just out of one's teens in a foreign country living amongst strangers would have made up their mind to fight it out with the Civil Service Commissioners, presided over by Sir Edward Ryan, a retired Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court? Surendranath was born to fight injustice and it is strange that he has so often been himself a victim of injustice from early life that he made it a mission of his life to fight for justice for his country, his people and many a poor and friendless victim of oppression whom he never turned away from his door. When the Civil Service Commissioners had condemned him unheard and refused him a hearing, he consulted some lawyer friends, briefed Mr. Mellish (afterwards Lord Justice) and applied for a mandamus before Cockburn, L. C. J., Hannen and Mellor, J.J., and obtained a rule against the Civil Service Commissioners, who thought discretion to be the better part of valour and wrote to Surendranath that his name had been restored amongst the successful candidates and did not appear in Court to show cause. Mr. B. L. Gupta of Bengal and Mr. Sripad Babaji Thakur of Bombay, both brilliant scholars, who were in the same boat with Surendranath and whose names had also been omitted from the list for identical reasons, with the resignation of fatalists, which is bred in the Indian blood, took the decree of the Civil Service Commissioners lying down, leaving it to Surendranath to fight out their cause by this test case. The pluck of Surendranath won for him the sympathy of Charles Dickens who warmly espoused his cause and the admiration of Surendranath's tutor, Prof. Henry Morley, who told him "Banerjea, they will raise a statue for you for the fight you are putting up." The learned English professor thus early appreciated the metal of which his young pupil was made.

Sir Surendranath's Commitment for contempt.

The following account of Surendranath's commitment for Contempt of Court from his Reminiscences will surely be found interesting and also instructive to those who can read between the lines:—

But from the streets adjoining the High Court let me turn to the Court-room where the Judges were to assemble. It was densely crowded. Not an inch of space was left out on the floor or in the galleries. I had to elbow my way along with the Counsel. It was past eleven o'clock; but the Judges had not yet come. They were closeted in the Chief Justice's room in close conference. We came to know afterwards what the conference was about. There was an eager discussion about the sentence to be passed. The majority of the Judges, and they were Europeans, were for sentencing me to imprisonment. Mr. Justice Romesh Chander Mitter insisted upon a fine only. The day before, so the report went, the Chief Justice had seen him at his private residence and had talked to him and argued with him with a view to persuading him to agree with the majority, but all in vain. At the conference the arguments were repeated with the added weight of the personal authority of the other Judges. But Mr. Justice Mitter remained unconvinced, relying on the precedent created in the Taylor case, where the Chief Justice, Sir Barnes Peacock, had deemed the infliction of a fine sufficient.

At last when it was past half past eleven, the five Judges appeared and took their seats on the Bench. The Chief Justice read out the judgment on behalf of the majority of his colleagues, putting in a slip, which was evidently a later production, that he and his colleagues disagreed with Mr. Justice Mitter. Mr. Justice Mitter then read out his dissenting judgment, after which the Judges left the Court. * * * The prison van was at the Court-gate ready for me; but in view of the attitude of the crowd, I was conveyed in a private carriage, leaving the Court by the Judges' entrance, and was taken by a round-about way to the Presidency jail. Mr. Larymore, the Superintendent of the jail was present, expecting my arrival. Mr. Larymore was a warm-hearted Irishman. He and I were friends, for we had sat round the same table as Municipal Commissioner of Calcutta. He treated me with all the courtesy that his official position permitted.

We have shown recently that Russel, J. C. J., and the English Judges have imposed only a fine in similar cases.

Choosing of jurors from persons present in Court.

A member of the legal profession in the Mofussil has drawn our attention to the unsatisfactory manner in which in some districts jurors are chosen from persons present in Court when there is a deficiency in the number of persons summoned to serve as jurors. The second proviso of sec. 276 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was enacted to meet cases of emergency where for some unavoidable reason a sufficient number of persons summoned is not forthcoming and in the absence of a provision like the one in question the result is likely to be a deadlock. We do not, however, endorse the view put forward by our correspondent that the person present in Court who may be called to make up the deficiency must be a person whose name is on the jury list. It is a special provision made to meet the emergencies of special circumstances and a free hand must be given to the Court. A careful examination of the relevant sections shows that there is no inconsistency in giving a free hand to the Court in this matter. Under sec. 321 a list of persons liable to serve as jurors or assessors and qualified in the judgment of the Sessions Judge and Collector is prepared and a number of persons whose names appear on such list, is summoned to attend the Sessions Court on every occasion. Supposing a sufficient number of persons entered on the list and summoned to attend the Court is not available for being empanelled. Sec. 276, proviso (2) enacts that with the leave of the Court, i.e., the Sessions Judge, any other persons present in Court may be called to make up the required number. Every Court must exercise its discretion in enforcing a statutory provision and the second proviso of sec. 276 clearly casts a duty on the Sessions Judge to satisfy himself that the person present in Court must be a fit and proper person to serve as a juror. Surely it is wholly improper and absolutely unpardonable if the work is done in a perfunctory manner which as pointed out by our correspondent seems to be the usual practice in some districts. The Sessions Judge must exercise his discretion and for this purpose is entitled to make such enquiry as may be necessary which in most cases need not go any further than questioning the person himself with a view to ascertain his position and status. If this is done there is nothing to complain of. There is no special charm in the fact of a particular name being on the jury list. The point is that the person called to serve as a juror must not be anybody and everybody but must be a man of some position and status. The two officers who are generally entrusted with the work of preparing the jury list are the Sessions Judge and the Collector and if in case of an emergency the Sessions Judge after making due enquiries puts a person who happens to be present in Court into the jury box to make up a deficiency it seems to be all right and not in any way inconsistent with the policy of the Code of Criminal Procedure. So far as the provision in the Code is concerned there is no good and sufficient reason for taking exception to it. The only difficulty arises in consequence of the manner and spirit in which officers charged with the administration of justice do their work. No Code in the world is or can be complete and much must be left to the discretion of the Court and officers presiding over Courts of Justice must bring some amount of reason to bear upon the work before them and they must always remember that they are to enforce the law of procedure in a manner which must not be inconsistent with the policy of the Code.

THE REPORT OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE, 1924-1925.

II

To give relief to the District Judges who on account of the heavy burden of their manifold duties do not find sufficient time to exercise proper supervision over the work of subordinate Courts, the Committee have recommended devolution of judicial powers on an extensive scale upon the Subordinate Judges. The marked improvement during the last 30 or 40 years in the calibre of the subordinate judiciary is considered a sufficient warrant for this scheme of devolution. But the Committee have omitted to consider the feasibility of applying the same policy with respect to administrative work arising in subordinate Courts. It must be evident that so long as the present system of centralisation of all powers in the District Judge continues, supervision over subordinate Courts can at best be superficial and merely occasional. He can never find time to guide and advise his subordinate officers or to appreciate their difficulties. Moreover, lack of confidence even in petty matters tends to take away from the latter a sense of their own responsibility. If the subordinate judiciary are believed to have improved so much as to justify wide devolution of judicial powers upon them, there cannot be any just ground for apprehending that in minor administrative work they will be found wanting. Unless the proper training in this branch of work be given to them, they may prove administrative failures when promoted to the posts of District Judges. The Committee foresee that in the near future there will be a separation of judicial and executive functions and that the administrative burden upon the District Judges will then be heavier still. The public naturally expect from them a high quality of judicial work as much as successful running of the administrative wheel. If they are reduced primarily to the position of executive officers and secondarily to that of Judges, they will not be able to command the proper amount of popular respect, nor will they be able to pick up that knowledge of law and of procedure which will eventually qualify them for High Court Judgeship. So, in the interest of the public it is extremely desirable that they should be relieved of as much administrative work of subordinate Courts as is possible.

The Subordinate Judges are proposed to be vested with power to try cases under the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, the Indian Succession Act, 1865, the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, and the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. They are also to be vested with powers of Assistant Sessions Judges. The maximum limit of their jurisdiction under the Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, is proposed to be raised from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000 and the provisions of the Act are proposed to be extended to several classes of cases now exempted from its operations.

To give relief to the Subordinate Judges who even now suffer from unmanageable congestion in their files, it is proposed that selected Munsifs should be vested with power to try suits up to the value of Rs. 5,000 instead of Rs. 2,000 as at present, and that the limit should vary from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 5,000, according to local requirements and the relative fitness and experience of the officers. Within such limits, they are to try cases under the several enactments mentioned above. The jurisdiction under the Small Cause Courts Act is proposed to be raised from Rs. 250 to 500. In District head-quarters, where there are many competent lawyers, this scheme of devolution will not lead to any inconvenience. But in sub-divisional towns and chaukis, great hardship will follow if litigants have to bring pleaders in most cases of higher value, from District Courts. Moreover, in those places there is a strong tendency to grossly under-value suits for the purpose of jurisdiction, and an almost equally strong tendency not to raise questions of jurisdiction. The Court Fees Act, 1870, provides a cumbersome procedure and an inadequate remedy for checking this evil. A wider devolution will lead to an extension of the evil. It may be mentioned here that in the Central Provinces and in the Punjab the limit of pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif was raised some years ago and their designation was changed to Subordinate Judges, 2nd class, in the former province and Subordinate Judges, 2nd, 3rd and 4th classes in the latter, according to the limits of their pecuniary jurisdiction.

The Committee have realised that a devolution of power upon Munsifs, "if not accompanied by an increase of staff, would remove the congestion from one place and put it in another," but as they were restricted in their enquiry by the proviso that they "will not enquire into the strength of the judicial administration maintained in each province," they have been compelled to recommend the establishment of village Courts under the Bengal Village Self-Government Act, 1919, and considerable devolution of judicial powers upon them. Had not the Central Government made this restriction, any proposal for considerable increase in expense of a reserved department would meet with such a stubborn opposition in the provincial Councils that the entire scheme of reform would have been jettisoned.

It is a matter for sincere regret that in the sphere of educating the villagers in civic responsibilities, Bengal has been the most backward province in India. In most other provinces, trial by village headmen known as village Munsifs, or by Honorary Munsifs, or by Panchayets, has been in existence for a long time. Though Honorary Munsifs and Village Munsifs have not proved successful, the Panchayet Courts have been exceedingly popular wherever introduced. Their success in Madras and in Burma has indeed been phenomenal, so much so that in Madras the system of village Munsif is now "a dying institution." It cannot seriously be urged that in the most advanced province of Bengal the villagers are the most backward in India. The premier position of Bengal has mainly been due to the eminent position which she had held in literature, laws, medicine and philosophy before she came in contact with the superior civilization of the west, and also to her power of assimilation of that civilization without losing her nationalism. It was the village organisations that transmitted such ancient culture for several centuries through despotism, invasion, anarchy and internecine warfare. If the village organisations have now become disintegrated and demoralised, the reasons are probably repugnance of the intelligentia and the well-to-do people to village life and the waning sympathy between those and the villagers. To maintain that villages are incapable of being successfully re-organised, and that it will be through the townspeople alone that the nation is to become fit for administrative responsibilities, is not only a demoralising confession but is stultifying to a degree. The Committee deserve much gratitude for having recommended this important measure. Had the public leaders been a little enthusiastic in the matter and had the scheme of the Bengal Village Self-Government Act been sufficiently broad, village Courts would have been a popular institution by this time. If sufficient confidence is not placed on persons who are going to be entrusted with administration of justice, the best men will not be available for the work. What in the opinion of the writer is now wanted, is the repeal of the whole enactment and the framing of a new Act on liberal lines. These village Panchayets must be trusted and respected, if they are to prove a success. It may be made the duty of Munsifs, as has been done in Madras, to help and advise these Panchayets when necessary, and to revise their decisions in certain abnormal events. These villagers will have this special advantage over paid tribunals, that they will know the character of the parties and the litigants appearing before them. Forgery and perjury would not have been rampant in Mofussil Courts, if the Judges were so familiar with the character of the parties and their witnesses, as to smell fraud and to detect it, wherever perpetrated. These practices exist because they do pay.

CHOOSING OF JURORS FROM PERSONS PRESENT IN COURT.

(1) In some districts in the Mufussil there is a practice of inviting persons happening to be present either in the Court premises or in the Court compound, to serve as jurors in Sessions trials in cases of deficiency of persons summoned as contemplated by sec. 276, proviso (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The practice prevailing is to call any person available and put him into the jury-box with-but caring to ascertain whether the names of those persons appear on the jury list as prepared under sec. 321, of the Criminal Procedure Code. Is such a course permissible under proviso (2), sec. 276, Cr. P. C., or, does the proviso require that persons present in Court, asked to make up a deficiency of jurors, should also be persons on the jury list but who may not have been summoned to serve as jurors on that occasion. The latter view seems to be reasonable and the reasons are the following:—

(a) Sec. 276, Cr. P. C., enacts, in the first instance, that the "jurors shall be chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as such, etc." Then come the provisos, of which the second runs as follows:—"In case of a deficiency of persons summoned the number of jurors required may, with the leave of the Court, be chosen from such other persons as may be present."

Now it is a recognised rule of interpretation that a word is to be considered as used throughout a statute in the same sense, more specially should it be so when the same word is being used in an almost similar collocation in a single section of a statute. Granting this, the word "persons" in the first part of sec. 276, necessarily means "persons" already on the jury list summoned under sec. 321 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The expression "such other persons," therefore, should mean persons already on the jury list but not summoned for the trial, the word "other," meaning "other than summoned," and the entire expression "such other persons" meaning "such persons as aforesaid," that is, persons on the list, the word "such" being referable to the context as appearing in the first part of the section and the word "other" differentiating them by the single criterion of not being summoned.

If this were not so, the words "such other" as qualifying "persons" would become meaningless surplusage, as there is no other conceivable context to which those words are referable; because if the legislature intended that non-jurymen present in Court could make up the deficiency then obviously the language would have been different, for instance, "such persons as may be present and otherwise fit to serve as jurors."

Sec. 321, Cr. P. C., cls. (1) and (2) seem to me to fortify my contention. These clauses clearly imply that there is such a thing as a due qualification for a juror, however small that qualification may be. Sec. 325 of the Code unmistakably indicates that whereas members of a special jury should possess superior qualification in respect of property, character or education, those of the common jury are to possess a measure of qualification, however small, in respect of these things; and the only guarantee that the Code recognises of these qualifications being possessed by jurymen is the joint enquiry by the Sessions Judge and the Collector, as required by sec. 321 of the Code. The proper interpretation of sec. 276, proviso (2) of the Code should therefore be this: that when a person already on the jury list happens to be present in Court, the legal presumption of his fitness is already there and will be acted upon by the Court until that presumption is displaced by a successful challenge to the polls as contemplated by sec. 278 of the Code.

In the making up, therefore, of a deficiency by persons present, the proviso only dispenses with the initial summoning by a preliminary lot (vide sec. 326, Cr. P. C.) and does not dispense with any other legal requirement.

The principles of natural justice appear also to be in favour of this interpretation. Secs. 312 to 327 provide for elaborate precautions against the jury turning out to be a body of men not in every respect fit for the work with which the law entrusts them. In these circumstances the legislature could not possibly have permitted the springing as a surprise upon an accused person of every loafer in the Court premises as an eligible jurymen knowing as we do the kind of persons who ordinarily loiter about in Courts. A jurymen thus picked out is more often than not an undesirable person and yet the practice of some of the Courts is to ask the Judge's Nazir, whenever there is a deficiency, to go out into the Court compound and make a roving search for stray loiterer in the clothes of a bhadralog to come and serve as juror, and the accused are solemnly asked to deliver their challenges, if any, as if the accused have a mental note of everything that can be said about every man in the street.

I have not been able to find out any case-law directly bearing upon the scope and exact meaning of proviso (2) to sec. 276, Cr. P. C., but a reference to the corresponding English law makes at least two things clear:

Firstly—Talesmen or, as they are more properly called, tales de circumstantibus who are the English equivalents of the supplementary jurors as under sec. 276, proviso (2), cannot be had at a trial at bar. [vide Halsbury, Vol. XVIII, p. 253, footnote (a)] not on the trial of an indictment under the commission of Gaol delivery and Oyer and terminer (vide Burn's Justices of the Peace, Vol. III, p. 970, 29th Ed.).

By the 6 Geo. IV, Ch. 50, sec. 37 (Jury's Act, 1825) Talesmen can of course be had before a Court of Assize and the words "shall appoint so many of such other able men of the county then present as shall make up a full jury" as appearing in the statute have of course been interpreted as seeming to point to persons whose names are or might be in the jurors' book. [Vide Halsbury, Vol. 18, p. 253, footnote (a)]. But the learned commentator does not appear to be sure of this interpretation and at the same time observes that "a custom to try by tales de circumstantibus in an inferior Court is bad because such would admit of trial by persons both profligate and unfit," Halsbury, Vol. 18, p. 253. The net result of the above seems to be that although the words "able men of the county present" might be held to include persons other than those on the jury list this is a meaning which is not yet an absolutely decided meaning. The words of the Indian statute [276, proviso (2)] are, however, different as I have already pointed out and it can be very well argued that the Indian legislature although providing for tales did not intend to reproduce the English statute in its entirety, but with the reservation that "Tales" must be from persons who are on the jury list.

The question now arises—

(a) Under sec. 276, proviso (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is it permissible, in order to make up the deficiency of jurymen, to requisition the services of persons present in Court whose names are not on the jury list and what should be the proper method of bringing before the Court the supplementary jury as contemplated by sec. 276, proviso (2)?

The method followed is for the Court to take the initiative in the sense that without the application of either the prosecutor or the accused the Sessions Judge asks the Nazir to go into the Court compound and find out some persons to serve as jurors and these persons are brought up in about five minutes. Is that a legal or a regular procedure for calling up these jurors?

The corresponding English statute, 6 Geo. IV, sec. 37, lays down that "every such Court upon request made for the King by anyone thereto authorised or assigned by the Court or on request made by the parties, Plaintiff or demandant, Defendant or tenant in any action or suit, whether popular or private, shall command the Sheriff or other Minister to whom the making of the return shall belong to name and appoint, etc., and the Sheriff or other Minister aforesaid shall at such command of the Court return such men duly qualified as shall be present or can be found to serve on the jury and shall add and annex their names to the former panel, etc."

Thus in England Talesmen are brought up through the same channel through which the original panel are returned, namely, through the Sheriff or other Minister appointed on that behalf. The reason for this rule can be gathered from the succeeding words of the statute which make it obligatory upon the Sheriff to return men duly qualified which implies an obligation upon him to make some sort of an enquiry into the fitness of the men whom he returns as Talesmen.

Is there any reason why the same rule should not apply here, namely, jurors under sec. 276, proviso (2) be required to be returned by the District Magistrate on the analogy of sec. 226, Cr. P. C., by which persons drawn by lot in open Court are required to be summoned by the District Magistrate?

In view of the recognised fact that "Talesmen" are always more or less deceptive their return through the District Magistrate is only a necessary guarantee of their fitness.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Mar. 6th.—Hareli Shah v. Charan Dass (Baluchistan).

This was an application for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council, there being no power in the Courts of Baluchistan to grant leave. There was a very large sum of money in dispute and although there were concurrent findings of the lower Courts those findings were come to on entirely divergent reasons.

Sir G. Lowndes and Mr. A. Majid for the Applicant. Leave was granted.

Mar. 6th, 8th and 9th.—Mir Subhan Ali v. Imami Begum (Berar).

The arguments in this appeal were heard by LORDS SHAW and BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI.

The suit was in regard to a claim to certain inam lands granted to an ancestor of the litigants and continued by Government to the holder and his male descendants. The Plaintiffs had in former suits established their title to a share in the estate but had failed to get the income from it. They now sued for partition and were opposed on the ground that being females they were not entitled to share, and that if they contended that that question was res judicata they were precluded from asking for partition now as they had failed to ask for such relief in their former suit.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

The appeal in Forbes v. Ralli Bros. is now being heard. The question for decision is whether the Appellant's lease to the Respondents was a permanent one and whether the Appellant is not in any event estopped from denying that it was permanent.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.

Sir John Simon, K. C., Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Respondents.

Mar. 12th.—Judgment was delivered in Mian Ghulam Rasul Khan v. Secretary of State, reversing the decree of the Lahore High Court and declaring that the Appellant was a Rajput and therefore a member of an agricultural tribe and entitled to purchase and hold the property in suit.

Mar. 10th, 12th and 13th.—Forbes v. Ralli Bros. The arguments were concluded in the above appeal and judgment was reserved.

Mar. 13th.—Judgment was delivered in Gajadhar Mahton v. Ambika Prasad Tewari, an appeal from Allahabad. The appeal was dismissed.

Mar. 13th and 16th.—Harigir Kisangir Gosari v. Anand Bharti Vishun Bharti Gosari (Central Provinces).

Before LORDS PHILLIMORE, CARSON, BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI, this appeal was argued by Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Appellants and Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents. The suit was instituted by the Respondent who was a Garbhari Ghosain, a caste, the members of which are ascetics except in the matter of marriage. Hindu law generally is applicable as varied by custom. The Respondent claimed title through his father's adoption. The Appellants deny the adoption and allege that the suit is barred by Art. 119 of the 2nd Sch. of the Limitation Act. Judgment was reserved.

Mar. 17th and 19th.—The same Board are now hearing an appeal from Patna, Agnilar v. Kuma Ganjananda Singh. This was a suit for possession of alluvial lands, which had been flooded by the Ganges and emerged again after about 3 years. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in favour of the present Respondent for 606 bighas. The High Court also found in favour of the Respondent but directed a Commissioner to make over possession of such lands as he found to lie north of the Cadastral Survey boundary of 1887, 1888. The Respondent contends inter alia that no appeal lies to the Privy Council on the ground that the question is purely one of fact on which there are concurrent findings of the Indian Courts.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Hyam for the Appellant.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

Mar. 19th and 23rd.—The hearing was concluded of Agnilar v. Ganjananda Singh (Patna). Judgment was reserved.

Mar. 23rd and 24th.—The following members of the Judicial Committee heard an appeal from Bombay, Shevak Jeranchhod Bhogilal v. The Dakore Temple Committee:—LORD ATKINSON, LORD CARSON, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMERR ALI.

In a suit instituted in 1880 it had been held that the Dakore Temple was a public charity and a scheme was framed for its administration under that scheme. Rules were to be drawn up by the Temple Committee and after sanction by the District Court were to have the same force as if they had been part of the scheme. Rules were framed and sanctioned by the District Court but on objection the High Court altered the rules by striking out all the provisions for payment for passes admitting to the Nij Mandir. From this order the Appellants, who are the hereditary custodians of the shrine, are appealing. The Respondents are (1) the Temple Committee, and (2) the Govs, or Brahmin priests who act as guides and instructors to the pilgrims. The latter contend that no fees are payable by them or by pilgrims accompanying them to the Shevaks, and also that no appeal lies from the order appealed against. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellants.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Wallach for the Temple Committee.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Govs.

Mar. 24th.—Judgment was delivered by LORD PHILLIMORE in Hope Prudhomme & Co. v. Hamel & Horley, an appeal from Bombay. The appeal was allowed.

Mar. 24th and 26th.—Kirkwood v. Maung Sin, an appeal from the Chief Court of Lower Burma, is concerned with the rights to the property of two Burman Buddhists who are deceased. The disputes between the parties were submitted to arbitration, the names of the Appellants who were minors being included in the reference. An application to file the resulting award was dismissed on the ground that it was invalid as against the minors, whose proper representation at the arbitration was impeached. The judgment appealed from held that the claim of the 1st Appellant was barred by limitation as she had failed to sue within 3 years of attaining her majority.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Hon. Geoffrey Lawrence, K. C. for the Appellants. Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

In Hareli Shah v. Khan Sahib Sheikh Panida Khan (Baluchistan), Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. A. Majid applied for a stay of proceedings pending an admitted appeal to the Judicial Committee on preliminary questions of limitation and jurisdiction.

The Hon. Henn Collins opposed, but suggested that certain commissions for the taking of evidence should continue but the actual trial should be stayed. An order was made accordingly.

"MEANING OF COUNSEL."

To THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir,

Mr. N. C. Sen Gupta's letter in your issue this week reminds me of two incidents which may be interesting to your readers.

(1) In March 1909, I was appearing before the Additional District Magistrate of Midnapore for the defence in an offshoot of the notorious Bomb Conspiracy case—Emperor v. Bakhal Chandra Laha. Incidentally, in the course of the proceedings, there was some discussion as to the proper mode of designating me (a mere Vakeel) in the order-sheet. The Officiating Advocate-General who was appearing for the prosecution was referred to by the learned Magistrate and he unhesitatingly gave his opinion that no matter whether a Barrister or a Vakeel was appearing, he was properly designated "Counsel for the accused." The Officiating Advocate-General was Mr. Walter Gregory.

(2) In a case before Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and another learned Judge, a Barrister objected to Sir Rashbehary Ghose's describing a Vakeel as "Counsel." That objection was met with the retort, "It is only the uneducated and the half-educated who think that the term 'Counsel' is restricted to Barristers." Verb Sap

Yours, etc.,
NARENDR K. BASU.

Recording of confessions in Calcutta.

The judgment of Mr. Justice Mukerji in Emperor v. Panchkari Dutt, 29 C. W. N. 300, discloses a curious defect in the drafting of the Act passed in 1923 for amending the Code of Criminal Procedure. There can be no doubt that the legislature intended that the recording of all confessions whether in Calcutta or in the Mofussil should be governed by the provisions of sec. 164 of the Code and the safe-guards laid down in the section should be followed in all cases without exception. With this view the legislature has amended sec. 164 and enacted it in the present form specifically mentioning a Presidency Magistrate as one of the officers empowered to record a confession under the section. But what is the effect of this amendment? It leaves matters exactly where they were and, although it may appear curious, a Presidency Magistrate has even now no power to record a confession under sec. 164, in other words, the safe-guards laid down for the recording of a confession, omission on the part of a Mofussil Magistrate to follow which renders a confession inadmissible in evidence, may quietly be ignored when a confession is recorded in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay.

Chap. XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure deals with information to the police and their powers to investigate and the only portions of this chapter which are applicable to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay are sub-sec. (2) of sec. 155 and sub-sec. (3) of sec. 156 which deal with investigation into a non-cognizable case directed by a Presidency Magistrate and investigation into a cognizable case directed by such Magistrate respectively. Under sub-sec. (2) of sec. 1, in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary, the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay and that being so investigations into cognizable cases undertaken by the police without the order of a Magistrate are exempted from the operation of Chap. XIV of the Code and necessarily sec. 164 cannot apply to these cases for its application is limited only to an investigation held under the chapter. Instances in which investigations are held into cognizable cases under orders of a Magistrate are so very rare that for all practical purposes they may be left out of consideration and the net result of the amendment is that in Calcutta as before there is no law regulating the recording of confessions—a state of things which the legislature surely intended to put a stop to, but it is very unfortunate that it has failed to express its intention in the terms used in the Code. The whole difficulty would have been avoided if the legislature had said that the provisions of Chap. XIV shall apply to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay and it is difficult to imagine what stood in the way of its doing so. There was a time when there was very great difference between the Presidency Towns and the Mofussil and this justified the making of special laws for the former areas, but times are changed and those days are long gone by. It is high time that the distinctions between the Calcutta and the provincial police were wiped out and both governed by the same law.

Another curious fact brought out by the same judgment will show conclusively how very necessary it is to obliterate the distinction referred to. Sec. 61 of the Code of Criminal Procedure lays down the wholesome rule that no police officer shall detain in custody a person arrested without warrant for more than twenty-four hours unless he gets a special order from a Magistrate. This section not being applicable to the police in Calcutta, the Deputy Commissioners have somehow or other clothed themselves with the power of detention for an unlimited period. There does not seem to be any statutory basis for this extraordinary power which the officers in question exercise quite arbitrarily but they have done this so long unchallenged that it is generally understood that there is such a power. We hope, however, that after the authoritative pronouncement of Mr. Justice Mukerji there will be an end of this unlawful interference with the liberty of subjects. In the view taken by Mr. Justice Mukerji he has the support of Mr. Justice Walmisley who also held a detention under similar circumstances as improper, presumably on the ground that no such unlimited power exists.

THE REPORT OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE, 1924-1925.

III

The Committee recommend that ex parte cases should be decreed without evidence, in certain classes of cases, after service of a "default" summons upon the Defendant. The object of issuing such summons will be to give the Defendant notice that unless he contests the claim, the Court will presume that he has no contest to make. They recommend that supervision over the process-serving staff should be more rigorous and thorough than at present, so that the presumption from non-appearance may arise. They think that the evidence adduced at present in undefended cases is merely formal. If a person brings a false claim, he has no difficulty in bringing false witnesses to support his claim. Neither the demeanour of the witnesses nor the improbability of the case enables a Court to feel justified in dismissing the claim, as improbable things do sometimes happen and truthful witnesses very often show suspicious demeanour. Moreover, the Courts have not the materials before them which will enable them to elicit the truth. They recommend that even if the present system continues, ex parte cases should be tried in places where there is a group of Courts, by a Registrar for all those Courts. The Registrar will be the Chief Ministerial Officer. They think, that it is waste of time for the presiding officers to do this work which is merely mechanical.

Nowhere in the whole report are the members so eloquent as in the Chapters (XX to XXIV) dealing with the right of appeal. This "right" is considered to be a "liability" for persons with a true claim to be harassed out of all proportion to the nature of the claim, and to be delayed unduly in the realisation of their just dues. They have therefore recommended several measures for final disposal in the first Appellate Court and for greater scrutiny in the admission of appeals, and the abolition of Letters Patent Appeals from decisions of single Judges except where certificates are granted by such Judges. Though they have made out a very strong case for those proposals, it is exceedingly doubtful if the public will approve of those measures. The people of India have more love for justice in the abstract than for general considerations of public convenience. Western people generally level the criticism against Indians that the latter are not a practical people, and are lacking in common sense. As Sir Herbert Risley has put it very facetiously, Indians have got two valves in their heart, one of which functions as the source of all discussions, social, legal, political and religious, while the other controls his social life, and that the one has no connection with the other. What the Indians lack in is not "the common sense," but the robust practical view of things commonly known as the "horse-sense." Their fondness for metaphysical and abstract discussions is the more marked, as they are less desirous than other people to follow the conclusions arrived at after such discussions. That explains also their religious tolerance, the large sums of money spent on ceremonial occasions in hearing learned discussions by Indian pandits and their fondness for legal discussions. Newspapers in India devote more space to legal matters than any daily paper of a western country. The people probably regret that the learned Judges of the High Court do not decide questions of law unless they arise in a case before them. The Committee think that it would be a desideratum if litigations could be finally disposed of by the trial Court to the satisfaction of the parties. But one cannot be sure that the public would be dissatisfied if Honourable Judges were permitted in appeals to decide legal conundrums, and pronounce on constitutional and social questions, unconnected with any case, but having a remote connection with legal principles. Such is also the atmosphere of the law Courts. The Committee have found that though in several enactments the right of appeal to the High Court was definitely refused, yet the power of interference and of supervision inherent in a supreme tribunal like the High Court and consequently reserved for it, has in practice come to be regarded as an ordinary power of appeal. The line of demarcation between the two classes of cases, varies according to difference in the temperament of the Judges, and to the environments they have been brought up in. They recommend a "stiffening" in admission of appeals, but so long as the mentality of the Indians does not undergo a radical change, the recommendation will remain as a pious wish. The inability to right a supposed wrong is considered by many Judges as an unjust restriction on their utility as superior judicial officers. It is about 70 years since Sir Henry Sumner Maine said in a convocation address of the Calcutta University that he expected from dissemination of mathematical and scientific training through the colleges, an improvement in the practical outlook of the Indians, but the improvement, if any, is hardly noticeable. Whether there has been any, will be evident from the nature of support accorded to the proposals of the Committee.

So far as the appellate work from decisions of Munsifs is concerned, the Committee recommend constitution of District Appellate Benches consisting of two selected Subordinate Judges. A concurrent decision of theirs is proposed to be made final on all questions of law and of fact. If they differ, a second appeal will lie to the High Court, both on questions of fact and of law, so that the Honourable Judges of the High Court will be able to do complete justice in the case. A well-known Judge once regretted that he had to "do injustice knowingly." In second appeals the chief merits of the proposed system are that decisions will be final within a short space of time and that the Subordinate Judges will find more time for deciding appeals than at present when they have to write appeal-proof judgments for use in the High Court. It cannot be gainsaid that one of the defects of the present system is that the principal qualification of a Judge has come to be conceived to be the capacity to write judgments that would read well and would withstand a battery in the Appellate Court, more than the ability to decide cases quickly and satisfactorily. It has been proposed that the Judges of the District Appellate Bench will not try any original suit, but will merely hear appeals and that they will hold their sittings in circuit over several districts, if the work of a single district be insufficient and if it be inconvenient to decide cases of several districts in one place. Neither the circuit system, nor the inconvenient system of hearing appeals of several districts at one station need be adopted, if those Judges are allowed to try original suits and to constitute periodically Appellate Bench for the district they work in. This modification may be adopted in the heavier districts where there are two or more Subordinate Judges. If the Committee's suggestion be accepted, the legislature will probably enact an additional schedule to the present Code of Civil Procedure, and will possibly permit local Governments to introduce this system in certain districts or throughout the province, subject to the approval of the Central Government. It may be worth while to consider whether it is not desirable to authorise Local Governments to permit trial by jury in commercial cases and in some other classes of cases requiring knowledge of local custom or of usages of certain sections of people. In some place the Munsif and Subordinate Judges are not kept employed for the whole time on account of insufficiency of work. If the District Judge be authorised to direct trial of selected cases or specified classes of cases by a Bench of two Munsifs and if their concurrent decision be made final on all questions of law and of fact, then the advantage to the public will be greater still.

With respect to the Calcutta Small Causes Court, the Committee think that the present system of hearing appeals by a Bench consisting of the trial Judge and of the Chief Judge, is unsatisfactory. They recommend a different constitution of the Appellate Bench and the creation of the post of a Commercial Judge. They suggest that some officers of the provincial service be trained in the usages of commerce, so that in case of a sudden influx of commercial cases, those officers may remove the congestion.

The Committee recommend that the District Judges should be given some training in civil law and in practice and procedure before appointment as such, and that recruits for the posts of Munsif should be given a thorough training in office and in legal work during their probationary period. They think that pleaders should be required to learn their work from some District Court pleaders on payment of some fee. If the High Court selects only those who enjoy a good reputation for devotion to details of work and are zealous in training others, and if the scale of fee for each be prescribed by the High Court, the improvement will be a far-reaching one. Not only will the pleaders improve, but the judicial officers who are recruited from the pleaders will also be better equipped than now. As at present, the newly appointed Munsif is as much dependent upon the advice and guidance of his subordinate clerks as the junior pleader is upon his clerk. The Committee have wisely refrained from considering any step for checking the undesirable over-crowding of the Bar, as any attempt in that direction might have launched them into the highly electrified grounds of social customs, political and economic conditions. They have left the matter for consideration by the Provincial Bar Councils.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Mar. 27th.—Judgment was delivered by LORD DUNEDIN in Udoy Chand Pannalal v. P. E. Guzdar (Bengal) in which an application had been made for special leave to appeal.

The question raised is an important one dealing with the meaning and scope of secs. 109 and 110 of the Civil Procedure Code and will be the subject-matter of a full report later.

A dispute arose in a contract for the sale of goods. There were abortive arbitrations and a suit was brought. The suit was stayed because of the arbitrations. New arbitration proceedings were held and two ex parte awards were made, one in favour of the present Petitioner for 81,000, the other in favour of the Respondents for 3,000.

The High Court on the application of the Respondent set aside the award in favour of the Petitioner. The latter thereupon sued to set aside the award in favour of the Respondents. His suit was dismissed by the High Court on appeal and on refusal of leave to appeal further, the present petition for special leave was filed. The Petitioner contended that although the immediate effect of his application was a decision whether or not he should pay only 3,000, yet the ultimate effect, if he could get rid of that decree for 3,000 against him, was whether or not he could obtain a sum of over 10,000.

Their Lordships refused leave on the ground that there was no property indirectly involved of the value of Rs. 10,000 within the meaning of sec. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code and said:—

"It must always be kept in view that no real mischief can arise from not allowing a very wide construction of the section, because such cases, if worthy of being tried by a higher tribunal, can always be dealt with under sub-sec. (c) of sec. 109."

Mar. 27th.—Judgment was delivered by LORD SHAW in Probhudas v. Ganidada (Bengal), where in sugar contracts the buyer claimed to deduct from the purchase price the equivalent of a decrease of duty. He contended that the duty was fixed on the basis of a tariff valuation and that as the tariff valuation was reduced hence the duty must be taken to have been reduced. This view was negatived and the decisions of the Courts in India were affirmed.

Mar. 27.—Leave was granted to withdraw the appeal in view of a compromise having been effected in Jagaveera R. Venkateswara v. E. N. Ayyan Avergal (Madras).

Mr. Narasimham for the Applicant.

Mar. 30th.—In Indrajit Pratap Sahi v. Amar Singh (Patna), Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Wallach applied to amend the order in Council passed in the appeal reported in 28 C. W. N. 277. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh opposed. Amendment was refused.

Mar. 30th.—Judgment was delivered in Shevak Jevanchand Bhogilal v. Dekone Temple Committee. The judgment of the High Court was set aside and the appeal allowed.

Mar. 27th, 30th and 31st.—The hearing was continued and concluded in Kirkwood v. Mg Sin (Lower Burma). Judgment was reserved.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Transfer application supported by affidavit of accused.

In the Calcutta High Court it is an established practice not to receive affidavits of accused persons in support of applications for transfer but it appears to be not unusual in some of the other High Courts to receive such affidavits. It is a cardinal principle of law that the accused should never be subjected to the risk of a prosecution in respect of a statement made by him in his defence. Where an accused moves a higher court for the transfer of a case pending against him on the ground that he reasonably apprehends that he will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court below, he is undoubtedly acting in his defence and the policy of the law is that no obstacle of any sort should be thrown in his way. The matter becomes one of great importance in cases in which an attempt is made to prosecute the accused for filing a false affidavit in support of his application for transfer.

The practice of receiving affidavits of accused persons is wholly illegal. Turning to sec. 5 of the Indian Oaths Act, we find that after enumerating the persons who are to make oaths or affirmations in Courts of law it clearly lays down that it shall not be lawful to administer, in a criminal proceeding, an oath or affirmation to the accused person. All applications to the High Court under sec. 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or to the District Magistrate under sec. 528 are surely criminal proceedings and the accused so long as the case in question is pending against him is an accused. How then can an oath be administered to the accused in connection with an application for transfer? How many illegal practices are in vogue in courts of law is more than one can say. In the Calcutta

High Court the practice is quite in conformity with law and common sense.

In 1906 the Allahabad High Court was called upon to pronounce its judgment on the question, Emperor v. Bindeshri Sing, 1. L. R. 28 All. 331 and Mr. Justice Richards held that where an accused person applies for the transfer of the case pending against him to some other Court supporting his application by an affidavit he cannot or at least ought not to be prosecuted under sec. 193, I. P. C., in respect of statements made therein. In a recent Lahore case, Crown v. Pirquadir Butsh Shah, 6 Lahore 34, Shadi Lal, C. J., has held that there is no law which confers upon an accused person immunity from prosecution in respect of a false statement in an affidavit tendered by him in support of his application for transfer and such statement can be the subject-matter of a charge for perjury. The learned Judge takes it that the only provision of the law which confers immunity upon an accused person from criminal liability for making a false statement is that contained in sub-sec. (2) of sec. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. His Lordship seems to have overlooked sec. 5 of the Oaths Act referred to above which places the matter beyond all reasonable doubt.

In the case in question it has been said that if the immunity were allowed to accused persons they will be at liberty to make reckless allegations against Judges and Magistrates and anxiety to avoid this undesirable consequence has led the Court to strain the law unduly against the accused. It is not a question of expediency but the question is whether it is at all legal and if it is not sanctioned by law it cannot be done whatever the consequences may be. The matter, however, does not seem to us to present any great difficulty. If the Courts uniformly refuse to take these affidavits of accused persons, transfer applications will have to be supported by statements on oath of some other person conversant with the facts of the case who is liable to be prose-

THE REPORT OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE, 1924-1925.

IV

The excessive costs which have to be incurred in a litigation in the High Court have given rise to an insistent demand by the public for a City Civil Court in Calcutta, similar to that in Madras. The Committee have carefully considered the proposal and have definitely rejected the idea. They think that a Court of the "mofussil type" will give less satisfaction to the public and that appeals to the High Court will be greater from such a Court than at present. "To get a cheap judge is by no means always an economy" is their opinion on the project. It cannot be gainsaid that a trial after it has once been commenced, is finished more quickly in the High Court than in a Subordinate Judge's Court. In the former case there are not so many unnecessary witnesses, nor is cross-examination so wearily lengthy and useless. The lawyers of the High Court are not only more competent as a body than the Mofussil lawyers, but have more respect for the Judge, and a suggestion from the latter that a cross-examination is being carried too minutely, or is directed on an unimportant line is always treated with proper respect. In Courts of the interior such suggestions are generally resented by the Bar and the Subordinate Judiciary are extremely anxious to avoid complaints about arbitrary methods. Their subordinate position is responsible for the inveterate tendency to follow the line of least resistance. They do not feel sure that if they depart from the traditional supineness and show greater firmness in rejecting remotely relevant questions, their action will not be condemned. Some typical cases have been cited (pp. 71-86) to illustrate the extravagant length of time which trials in subordinate Courts take up, and that when leading Counsel appear before such Courts the Judges surrender themselves to these gentlemen and allow the trials to drift as they list. Such being the case, the Judge of the City Civil Court will not be able to try cases as expeditiously as a High Court Judge. Moreover, it is considered that the enrolment of Vakeels as Advocates will have the effect of cheapening litigation in the High Court. But so long as the public have to pay fees both to the Attorneys and to the Counsel, the expenses are bound to be prohibitive. The time has now come when the idea that the legal profession should consist of two branches, the upper one of which will have to conduct themselves more cleanly and more honourably than the lower, deserves to be considerably modified. So long as Counsel and Advocates are refused direct contact with clients, and so long as the attorneys are not allowed to prepare plaints, move petitions in Court, conduct trials of ex parte cases and their out-put is unduly restricted by a defective system of examination, the cost of litigation in the High Court will continue to be as excessive as at present. A commission to examine a witness for about 3 hours, which costs in a lower Court about Rs. 30 including pleader's fees, is likely to require in the High Court Rs. 400 to Rs. 500 at the lowest. The prohibitive nature of the costs is the real reason why suits for partition of houses are more rare in the High Court than in the Courts at Alipore.

The Committee strongly recommend that some system of training for legal practitioners in Mofussil Courts should be introduced, so that they may get the proper practical training before commencing practice. If only those District Court pleaders are selected as instructors, who besides being efficient are likely to display some zeal in their work, if their proposed remuneration be commensurate with the labour involved and if the intending practitioners are allowed to select their own instructors from those in the approved list, the effect will be noticeable. One of the reasons why the system of "articled clerks" has not been successful in the case of vakeels but has been a complete success in the case of attorneys, is that the latter pay some remuneration and render valuable assistance to their masters, while the masters of the former get no benefit from the arrangement. Any improvement in the legal profession will also effect a corresponding improvement in the junior ranks of the subordinate judiciary, as the latter are exclusively recruited from the Bar. If a junior pleader is too much dependent on his clerk for the little work that comes in his way, then on being appointed as a Munsif, he will be still more dependent on his ministerial officers for the great variety and complexity of his office work.

In the University of Madras, vakeels have to attend before enrolment a course of lectures on professional conduct and etiquette. If such a course of study were introduced in the curriculum of the B. L. Examination of the Calcutta University, much good may come from the innovation. At present, many Mofussil practitioners have conflicting ideas about the dignity attaching to the profession. While they do not always show a proper standard of dignity in dealings with clients and in conduct of cases, their exaggerated ideas of dignity are responsible for a great reluctance to go to a Court's office to examine a record, to sign a decree or a register of payments. Naturally enough, the clerks will expect some personal benefit for sending a record or a register to a pleader in disregard of departmental rules. The Judicial Officers also very often betray a poor idea of dignity on some lines of conduct and an exaggerated idea in others. As the Vice-Chancellor of the University is a Judge of the Calcutta High Court and the faculty of law is composed mainly of practising lawyers, there may not be a great difficulty in the way of introducing some change in the University curriculum. To achieve the end it is also necessary that the conduct of legal business should be more dignified, witnesses should be better treated, the traditional symbols of dress and other matters of form should be religiously observed, there should be more of mutual respect between the Bench and the Bar and that there should be slackening of the tendency to protect by every possible means a member of the profession who shows gross delinquency in any matter. The Committee expect much service to the public from the Provincial Bar Council when it will be formed. If that Council show as much moral courage as the Civil Justice Committee, who have not spared even High Court Judges and Judicial Commissioners, it can do immense good to the public.

In a country where the people are habitually dilatory, it is not possible for the pleaders to enforce punctuality, even if they were so minded. The change in habit must really be brought about by the judges. "Presiding officers must be stricter," and "be ready to give up a reputation for easy-going good nature in the interests of efficiency." Stricter methods may, in the transitional period, occasion injustice in a few cases, but in the long run the public will be benefited. The Committee say that unless the Courts make it understood that "an order must be obeyed," there will not be great improvement in any direction. On the point of strictness there seems to be much popular misconception among the public and the legal practitioners. The chief attributes associated with a strict officer are want of consideration for convenience of the public and lack of courtesy. An officer who follows strictness from a higher sense of duty or from a love of method, need not entertain any apathy towards public convenience or a disregard for sentiments of others. The misconception may have been due to the cause that some officers in the past in their excessive anxiety to do their duty or to follow a cherished method of procedure, may have shown impatience or irritation whenever they thought they were being intentionally obstructed, and in such a frame of mind may have overlooked the very consideration which lent justification for stricter methods. All branches of the public service have much improved of late years and people will soon have occasion to modify their former conception. A "nation in making" cannot but produce, in increasing members, officers of the proper type.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Mar. 31st.—Thakur Ashutosh Deo v. Bansidhar Sharaff. In this application, Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and A. M. Talbot applied on behalf of Government for leave to join in the appeal to the Privy Council.

The Appellant was a ghatwal and proceedings had been taken for the sale of his tenure in satisfaction of a judgment-debt. It was a question whether the tenure was saleable without the consent of Government. Leave was granted.

Mar. 31st.—In Secretary of State v. Raja Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo (Patna), the application by the Petitioner to be heard was reserved. The appeal was heard by the Board in December last in the absence of the Respondent and judgment was reserved. The Respondent applied earlier in the term for leave on the ground that although funds had been transmitted to their agent in England he had failed to brief counsel.

It was now stated in affidavit that a change of solicitors had been made and it was submitted that the failure to appear at the hearing was in no way due to the negligence of the Respondent. The original solicitor had failed to obey an order of the Chancery Judge to hand over the funds and papers in his hands and a writ of attachment had issued and had been executed. The Respondent's present solicitors would, however, obtain further funds and instructions.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Párikh for the Applicant-Respondent.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and A. M. Talbot for the Secretary of State.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Messrs. E. B. Raikes and Douglas McNair for the other Appellants.

Leave was granted for the Respondent to be heard, the hearing to be fixed for the beginning of the June sittings.

HAND-BOOK OF ENGLISH CONSTITUTIONAL LAW FOR INDIAN STUDENTS. By Jyoti Prasad Sarbadhikari, M.A., B.L. Das Gupta & Co., Publishers, 54/3, College Street, Calcutta, 1925. Price Rs. 4-8.

It is no mere accident that constitutional questions have been engaging an increasing amount of attention on the part of the educational authorities all over India. Until the inauguration of the Montague-Chelmsford Reforms, the constitutional position of India was closely assimilated to that of the Crown Colonies, the Government of the country being a thinly disguised despotism, on the whole benevolent in character, but fitting so ill with the constitutional system of the Government of the British Isles that hardly any practical object could be served by requiring Indian Students to study English constitutional law. The promise of responsible Government, however inadequately fulfilled on account of the innumerable limitations by which it has been hedged round, contained in the Government of India Act of 1919-20, has done at least one important service—it has sifted the consideration of questions of constitution and constitutional law above the plane of mere academical discussions, within as well as outside the precincts of educational institutions. The very close and careful analysis of the English constitution and English constitutional law from the point of view and for the benefit of Indian Students, presented by Mr. Sarvadhikari in this attractively got-up hand-book of about 250 pages, is both a sign of the times and an intelligent anticipation of the needs of a whole generation of students of Indian politics to come.

It is a fact that the Indian constitution and Indian constitutional law, whatever that is, cannot be studied at this moment without a preliminary study of the English constitution of which it is an offshoot. At what points of contact and through what channels Indian constitutional law draws its vital forces from that fountain-head and what forces retard the circulation of the life-blood of English constitutional law into the administrative system of British India—that is the matter that must engage the attention of students of Indian politics at the present moment and for years to come. In this little book not only has the English constitutional law been analysed and exhibited from the point of view of an Indian scholar, the points of contact referred to above with the Indian constitution have been definitely indicated with the object, it is to be hoped, of carrying the study and discussion into the details of the Indian constitutional system, in a treatise by itself.

Of the manner in which the work has been executed, multum in parvo appears to be the key-note. And yet it is not a digest only or a cram-book either. It is the work of a scholar who has studied the whole subject rationally and has attempted to present, with evident success, the various aspects of the subject in a rational way. It ought not therefore to be difficult for any student of the book to discriminate the principles from the illustrative details, without which a mere enunciation of the principles would not have been adequately illuminating or convincing. The subject has been dealt with in seven chapters, an introductory chapter followed by chapters on (i) The Subject, (ii) The Crown, (iii) The Executive, (iv) The Legislature, (v) The Judiciary and (vi) The Colonies and India. The sub-heading Treason and Sedition would, we think, have come naturally within the chapter dealing with the Crown, but this misplacement, if it is one, is hardly of any consequence. Not a single leading case of importance appears to have been left out. It is a work of great intrinsic merit, an admirable hand-book for students, and a convenient introductory to the study of constitution and constitutional law for all students of Indian politics.

Control of domestic relations by injunction.

An interesting case on the above subject recently arose in America. The Plaintiff's petition alleged that the Defendant was seeking the affections and support of the Plaintiff's husband. It was further alleged that the Defendant was insolvent and that if she continued her present course of conduct the Plaintiff would be deprived of the love, support and consortium of her husband. The Plaintiff prayed for equitable relief. The Defendant entered a general denial. The Court found the issues in favour of the Plaintiff and granted an injunction restraining the Defendant from associating with the Plaintiff's husband, going near him, communicating with him or doing any act to prevent him from giving the Plaintiff his love, companionship or support. The matter was taken up to the highest Court where it was held that equity will not attempt to control domestic relations by means of an injunction [Snedaker v. King, 145 N. E. 15 (Ohio)].

The learned commentator in Harvard Law Review observes as follows:—"Although the proposition that equity has jurisdiction only to protect property interests was long regarded as axiomatic, there is a growing body of authority to the effect that interests in personality will be protected. Some Courts tread lightly in this unaccustomed field and lean upon shadowy property rights which they find co-existent with the personal interests protected. In the case in question the husband was under a statutory duty to support his wife. A Court which sought a peg upon which to hang its decision might treat the wife's right to support as a property interest entitled to equitable protection. A few of the Courts which take the more desirable view that the absence of a proprietary interest does not deprive equity of jurisdiction have given relief in cases involving domestic relations. The practical difficulty of enforcing decrees like that awarded by the lower Court supports the result of the case under notice."

Abuse of judicial privilege.

In a recent case (Benarasi Das v. Crown, 5 Lahore 166), the Lahore High Court has acted very properly in expunging from the record certain portions of the judgment of the Magistrate in which strong reflections were made against the Petitioner who was not before the Court in any capacity, neither as a party nor as a witness. In a case in which a clerk of the local Cantonment office was prosecuted for having engaged in trade and thereby committed an offence under sec. 168, I. P. C., the Magistrate after finding the accused not guilty of the offence alleged against him proceeded in the concluding portion of his judgment to express strong opinions as to the motives which he considered had inspired the prosecution. He declared that the accused was the victim of a conspiracy on the part of the managing committee of the All-India Cantonment Association. He stated that this body of which the Petitioner was the Vice-President was anxious to have the accused dismissed from his post simply because its members had failed to have their own way with the Cantonment authorities. He further added that the columns of a newspaper known as the "Cantonment Advocate" had been freely used by the Petitioner and those associated with him to injure the accused. He concluded his judgment by stating that the complaint was based purely on malicious prosecution of the accused. These portions of the judgment the Petitioner asked to have expunged.

Forde, J., allowed the application and observed as follows :—" It is an elementary duty of a Judge in a criminal case to exclude evidence which is not legally admissible. The trial Magistrate in the case before me has conspicuously failed in this duty. I am further of opinion that the observations of the Magistrate concerning the Petitioner made in a proceeding in which the Petitioner had no opportunity of being heard based upon material which is not admissible in evidence in those proceedings and which, even if admissible, would not justify the observations in question amount to an abuse of judicial privilege. It would be a denial of justice to allow the reflections upon the character of the Petitioner to stand."

Law of treason in Britain and in Ireland.

The following extract from the Law Times will go to show that in the Irish Free State, the law of treason is being made more stringent than it is in Great Britain, which before the separation was also the law in Ireland :—

The Treasonable and Seditious Offences Bill, which was read the second time in the Dail Eireann of the Irish Free State on the 19th inst., declares, in its first clause, that anyone who commits, in the Irish Free State, certain acts, therein specified, shall be guilty of treason and shall be liable on conviction thereof to suffer death. The third sub-clause of the first clause of the Bill is as follows :—" Every person charged under this section with treason shall and may be indicted, arraigned, and tried in the same manner and according to the same course and order of trial in every respect and upon the like evidence as if such person stood charged with murder, and if such person is found guilty of treason he shall be convicted and sentenced in the same manner as if he had been found guilty of murder." It will be observed that the provision that the trial for treason shall be conducted in the same manner and "upon the like evidence" as if the trial were one for murder deprives the person accused of privileges secured to him by the statute of 7 & 8 Will. 3, which were extended to Ireland by various subsequent statutes, piecemeal. Thus a section of the statute of William III. (re-enacting and strengthening an enactment of Edward VI. (1 Edw. 6, c. 12, s. 22)), making necessary a technical minimum of proof by providing that a prisoner should not be convicted unless he voluntarily confessed in open Court or his guilt were established by two witnesses deposing either to the same overt acts or, at least, to separate overt acts of the same kind of treason, is omitted from the Bill. So, too, a provision of the Act of William III., which enacts that treason only can be prosecuted within three years from its commission unless it were committed abroad or consisted of an actual plot to assassinate the sovereign is omitted from the Bill. These omissions are, of course, calculated to afford greater facilities of obtaining convictions under the Bill. The provision that a person found guilty of treason shall be convicted and sentenced in the same manner as if he had been found guilty of murder, savours of the superfluous. In 1870, by the Forfeitures Acts, all the exceptional features of execution for treason were abolished except in cases where quartering or beheading may be ordered by Royal warrant. By an Act of 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 146, s. 2), the Crown has still power to order by warrant under the sign manual that any male who has been sentenced to be hanged for treason shall be beheaded. The judge, however, cannot appoint any mode of death but hanging. When a treason had been committed, but where the Crown could only obtain a single witness, the only mode of punishing the offender was either to prosecute him for sedition, as in the case of Hampden (9 St. Tr. p. 1853), who took part in the Rye House Plot, or to attain him by an ex post facto Act of Parliament (such Acts cannot be passed under the Irish Constitution), as in the case of Sir John Fenwick, who plotted the assassination of William III. The provision requiring two witnesses in cases of treason to procure a conviction did not become law in Ireland till 1821 (1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 24). On the 29th April 1795, nearly a century after Sir John Fenwick's attainder, Mr. Curran, from his place in the Irish House of Commons, unsuccessfully moved for leave to bring in a Bill for amending the Irish laws in cases of high treason, in a speech in the course of which he alluded to the difference which was said to exist between the laws relative to high treason in Ireland and Great Britain, in the latter of which two witnesses were necessary in order to convict the accused, while in Ireland a single witness was deemed sufficient.

V

The Committee recommend that officers of the Indian Civil Service should be better grounded in legal principles, and that those appointed as District Judges should be required to undergo some short training as Subordinate Judicial Officers. They have quoted from a communication which passed in the year 1907 from the Government of India to the Secretary of State (vide p. 191) which recognised that the absence of proper legal training in officers whose function was to hear appeals from trained judicial officers constituted a "blot" on the administration. The chief reason why such officers have been popular is that on account of their superior general culture and of being brought up under better environments in an advanced country they have not only been generally able to pick up the necessary knowledge but have shown high administrative ability and a broader sympathy for the people than most natives of the soil, whose ennui and apathy have struck some foreign travellers as something inexplicable. Some indeed like Justices Field and Rampini have earned a high reputation for being sound lawyers. But in many cases want of confidence in their own legal knowledge has been responsible for weakness in administration and consequent enervating effect upon the subordinate judiciary.

The Committee have recommended an elaborate system of training for probationary Munsifs, so that they too may not have to learn their work at the expense of public justice. Another object is to give them a proper training in office methods. One often hears judicial officers complain that they cannot effect any improvement in office as their powers of control are very limited. They forget that if they fail in utilising even those small powers in effecting a reform in the office, there can be no justification for investing them with wider powers. But, the Committee's recommendation that officers should not be promoted from one grade to another as a matter of routine, but that incompetent officers should be passed over, would be a dangerous principle under present conditions. What is wanted now is to develop in them a proper sense of responsibility and dignity. If the recommendation is accepted they will be still more timid than at present. Extreme subordination and full sense of responsibility ill go together. The remedy lies in proper selection during recruitment and in selecting officers for superior posts not by seniority but by test of merit.

The Courts' offices are proposed to be improved by better organisation, more effective supervision and by increasing the pay and prospects of the ministerial officers. Process-serving establishment is also proposed to be improved by similar methods. For greater supervision of their work in the interior the creation of posts of Inspectors of process-servers is recommended.

Improvements in administration inevitably mean increase in costs. If a clerk or a process-server is poorly paid, it is the litigant public who supplement their income, and once the system has begun it does not stop just when the living wage has been reached, but the earning continues until it is many times over the remuneration which would be fit for the post and the abuses reach such gigantic proportions that the system comes to be known as an "open secret." The less there are of such "open secrets" the better is the administration. If the public feel sure that besides the prescribed fees they will not be required to pay anything, they may not grudge an increase in fees to cover increase in pay. But what is most important of all is that the public leaders should not show in their anxiety to secure money for the "nation building" departments, so much jealousy for expenses on the "reserved" side. Heavy and gigantic structures are best built when the soil has been made firm, and the money spent on strengthening the foundation is never wasted.

The question of proper service of processes, which forms the foundation of the civil judicial system, has received the due consideration of the Committee. But even in spite of their anxiety to remove all legitimate grounds of complaints they have not been able to overcome some of the difficulties of the problem. The present system would not have worked so badly in practice, did Defendants and judgment-debtors act up to what is expected of them, viz., by acknowledging service of summonses and notices by affixing signatures or finger-prints on the original processes, and if the neighbours came forward to prove due service. The Courts find it difficult to discriminate between cases of true service from false ones. The rule requiring an identifier for service of a process has given rise to loud complaints. That the rule is highly inconvenient and that it is responsible for many of the abuses, cannot be questioned. But if the parties are exonerated from all liability to have their processes duly served by the process-servers on their identification, there will be many false accusations of suppression of processes and the Court's officers will find it very difficult to prove due service. At present, the responsibility of proving due service lies with the party at whose instance the process was served.

They take the proper measures to preserve evidence of service. The witnesses whom the Court's peon may find present during service, may be on friendly terms with the person served, and it may happen that on an enquiry into a complaint of suppression of a process, those persons will deny all knowledge. The Committee have refrained from pronouncing any opinion as to whether the rule requiring an identifier should be abrogated or not, they have recommended however, that identifiers and process-servers should not be required to prove service by affidavit—which is in many cases a "solemn farce" and which puts the identifier to needless trouble. It is well-known that cases have to be adjourned several times on account of the failure of the identifier on account of illness or some private reason to turn up to swear the affidavit in time. The reasons why processes of Criminal Courts are properly served without identifiers are that the village chaukidars and dafadars help the peons, that the parties who generally reside in the same locality also help them, and that the accused has nothing to gain but much to lose from a false plea of non-receipt of a summons. The proposal for general use of the post office for service of processes was considered and the Committee are of opinion that it would "practically mean flying from the ill we have to others that we know not of." The reasons that postal peons are recruited from the same ranks of society as Civil Court peons and that they are not subject to the discipline of the Court are sufficient for not showing any preference to them. The Committee think that in Bengal and some other provinces, "personal service is made a fetish," which it was not in the contemplation of the legislature, and that service upon an adult male member of the family ought to be sufficient when Defendant is not found at home. They also suggest that irregularity in the service of a summons should not be a ground for the setting aside of an ex parte decree unless the Court is satisfied that the Defendant had no notice of the date of hearing. They recommend also that the sum of about 18 lacs of rupees which the Local Government make in each year a profit of, should be utilised in improving the process-serving agency, so that the litigants, get "full value for the money paid for a specific purpose." The Committee think that summonses upon witnesses can very conveniently be served through the parties themselves.

The beat-system of service analogous to that under which postal letters are delivered, has been found by the members to have worked very satisfactorily in some provinces in Upper India and they consider it desirable that it should be introduced everywhere. Under that system processes are served more quickly, the process-servers are kept more fully employed, the nezarat finds fewer scope for nepotism and the dishonest litigants find fewer opportunities for securing the services of a willing accomplice. To ensure that the peons actually visit the villages, a form of patrol-book in use in the Bombay Presidency is proposed to be extended to other Provinces. The peons will be required to note in the book the villages visited in a round, and will take the signatures of some villagers in each to show that he had been actually to those villages.

The Full Bench Decision in Narendra Chandra Rudra Pal v. Sabarali Bhuiya.

It was indeed a puzzling point that was referred to the Full Bench which recently sat to decide whether the procedure laid down in sec. 360 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is applicable to cases under sec. 145 of the Code, in other words, whether the evidence of witnesses in such cases is to be read over to them in the manner provided for in sec. 360. This section enacts that the evidence of each witness taken under sec. 356 as soon as completed shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused if in attendance or of his pleader if he appears by pleader and shall, if necessary, be corrected. Turning to sec. 356 it appears that that section is made applicable in so many words to enquiries under Chap. XII of the Code, i.e., to proceedings under sec. 145 of the Code. Reading the two sections together the law as stated in the Code is this—As the evidence of each witness taken in a case under sec. 145 of the Code is completed it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused, if in attendance or of his pleader, if he appears by pleader and shall, if necessary, be corrected. It is noteworthy that the language of sec. 360 is “it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused, if he is in attendance or of his pleader, if he appears by pleader” and not “in the presence of the accused, if any.” Had it been the latter the puzzle would not have arisen to the great relief of all concerned, but as it is the words used by the legislature surely include within the purview of sec. 360 all cases under sec. 145 of the Code to which that section is made applicable in its entirety and whether or not the legislature has succeeded in expressing its intention with sufficient clearness is an altogether different matter. It is a well-recognised rule of construction of statute that a section is to be given the meaning which the words employed therein reasonably bear and nothing is to be read into it, regard being had to what the legislature intended to enact. Sec. 360 does not make a distinction between a case when there is an accused person and when there is none. If it is established that a distinction has been made between the two classes of cases on the basis that an accused is a person accused of an offence only then sec. 360 cannot apply to enquiries under Chap. XII of the Code, but it is by reference to sec. 356 specifically made applicable to them; if no such distinction has at all been made in the Code then sec. 360 applies to enquiries under Chap. XII in its entirety. The words “in the presence of the accused, if in attendance or of his pleader, if he appears by pleader” do not justify the view that the section contemplates two classes of cases, viz., (1) where there is an accused in the sense of a person accused of an offence, and (2) where an enquiry is being held against a person who is not accused of an offence, and the depositions of witnesses are to be read over to them in the presence of the accused only in the former class of cases.

This is however the decision of the majority of the Full Bench who have held that sec. 360 is applicable to cases under sec. 145 of the Code so far as to make it obligatory for the deposition to be read over to the witness, but it need not be read over to him in the presence of the parties to the proceeding for they are not “accused.” Their Lordships forming the majority of the Full Bench have taken a practical view of the matter and laid down a procedure which is expedient and free from as much difficulty in its actual application as possible and this is undoubtedly the view one is tempted to take as being consistent with common sense. All these considerations however are of no avail in construing the words of the statute. To give effect to them against the plain meaning of the statute would be to arrogate the function of the legislature. The procedure which the minority of the Judges of the Full Bench have taken to be what has been laid down by the section may be beset with various difficulties in its practical application, but the proper remedy is the amendment of the Code which is purely the business of the legislature. The difficulty which apparently stood in the way of the majority of the Full Bench in making the sec. 360 applicable in toto to enquiries under Chap. XII of the Code is that in the opinion of their Lordships "accused" can only mean a person accused of an offence. In the opinion of those who take the opposite view "accused" practically means a person against whom the Criminal Court is exercising jurisdiction. This view was taken by the Calcutta High Court (Ghosh and Rampini, JJ.) as far back as 1896 in Jhohu Singh v. Queen-Empress, I. L. R. 23 Cal. 493, following the decision of the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Mona Puna, I. L. R. 16 Bom. 661. Sec. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure may very properly be called "the curious section of the Code". The number of judicial decisions in which the section has been interpreted is legion. Full Bench after Full Bench has sat to elucidate knotty points of law arising under the section but the knottiest are perhaps still awaiting decision.

It is abundantly clear from the wording of sec. 356 that the legislature has excluded enquiries under Chaps. VIII and X of the Code from the operation of that section and necessarily of sec. 360 but has in so many words made the sections applicable to enquiries under Chap. XII and it is difficult to conceive that the legislature has used the word "accused" in sec. 360 in a limited sense so as not to include a party to a proceeding under sec. 145. Leaving aside for our present purpose other enquiries contemplated by the Code a party to a proceeding under sec. 145 is one against whom an allegation has been made before a Magistrate either in a police report or some other information that he is concerned in a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, or in other words, he is likely to commit an offence involving a breach of the peace if immediate steps are not taken by the Magistrate and it does not require a wide stretch of imagination to include such a person within the category of an accused, specially bearing in mind that the word has nowhere been defined in the Code.

The effect of the Full Bench decision as to the meaning of the word accused is that a person against whom an order has been made under Chap. VIII of the Code for keeping the peace or for good behaviour is not also an "accused" in the same way as a party to a proceeding under sec. 145 of the Code is not. Sec. 439 of the Code lays down that in exercising its Revisional Jurisdiction no order shall be made by the High Court to the prejudice of the accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by pleader in his own defence, but a person "bound over for keeping the peace or being of good behaviour being not an accused is not entitled to the benefit of the wholesome provision contained in sub-sec. (2) of sec. 439 referred to above. The peculiar nature of bad livelihood cases has made it necessary for the High Court to introduce the practice of entering into evidence in revising orders in these cases; and to hold that in such cases an order can be made to the prejudice of the person aggrieved without giving him an opportunity of being heard is to lay down a proposition which does not at all stand to reason and is wholly inconsistent with the policy of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the cardinal principles of our system of jurisprudence. Under the Code, as it now stands after the amendment in 1923, proceedings under sec. 145 have been made amenable to the Ordinary Revisional Jurisdiction of the High Court. This is as it ought to be and the legislature has acted very properly in going back to what the law was before the Code of 1898 was enacted; but a party to a proceeding under sec. 145 not being an accused an order may be made by the High Court in revision to the prejudice of all the parties to the proceeding without hearing any one of them—a position almost verging on absurdity, specially bearing in mind that sec. 145 does not merely prevent a breach of the peace, which is a matter properly within the scope of a Criminal Court and for which there are other provisions in the Code, but practically decides the ownership of immoveable property.

THE REPORT OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE, 1924-1925.

•VI

The defective nature of the pleadings has come in for a share of criticism. Important matters are very often omitted, while unimportant and irrelevant matters are inserted in pleadings. The remedy for this state of things is proposed to be left to the Courts. But no suggestion from the Bench is more resented by members of the Bar than those aimed at improvement in the form of the pleadings. While the pleadings in the High Court are full of sententious repetitions and grandiose expressions, those in Mofussil Courts are replete with slipshod expressions and betray extreme carelessness. In most written statements filed in Mofussil Courts, each line of allegation in the plaint is categorically denied, but in the concluding paragraph the defence version is given, in which most of the allegations previously denied are admitted. Fatal defects in a plaint are very often overlooked. So long as the Subordinate judicial officers fail to command proper respect, the real improvement in this matter as well as in several others must be looked for from improvements in the legal profession.

The practice of allowing the pleaders to frame issues has been severely condemned. The procedure is stated to be not only "illegal" but "intensely unsatisfactory." The plea of want of time put forward by judicial officers is not only considered "unsustainable," but it has been held that "if the law directs presiding officers to perform a particular duty, that duty must be performed and time must be found for its performance." In the cases of the High Courts and of the Judicial Commissioners' Courts, the system of framing issues long before trial has been condemned, the practice in the Calcutta High Court of framing issues during trial has been recommended for extension and the "Issue Court" in the Madras High Court is recommended for immediate abolition, as the time of a High Court Judge is considered too valuable to be wasted in framing issues which will be tried by another Bench of Judges. The reasons for suggesting such a wide divergence in procedure are given as the greater need in Mofussil Courts to help pleaders and parties to confine the contest really to the subject-matter of the suit, the need for greater appreciation of the real nature of contest in each case and the firmer grip which the judicial officers will get over their files, which may really turn out not to be so unmanageable as is generally thought. The soundness of this view must be acknowledged, but there are some countervailing circumstances which need not be altogether overlooked. In complicated cases the most important part of the work for the Judge is to understand the respective case of each party and the evidence proposed to be adduced by each, and this work must be done in an initial stage of the suit if issues are to be framed then by the Judge. The case is expected to be ready for trial about a year later and by that time the Judge may have been transferred or the case may have been settled in or out of Court. A large proportion of contested cases in the Mofussil Courts is compromised. The labour devoted to and the time spent in the framing of issues are wasted. Even if the Judge who has framed issues eventually tries the case, he may have forgotten the facts as narrated to him about a year ago and the whole work may have to be done over again. It is only when people fail to appreciate the utility of a rule of law, that they begin to lose respect for that rule. The matter may be solved satisfactorily if framing of issues by subordinate Courts at an initial stage is made compulsory in every suit tried under ordinary procedure, except those relating to title to immovable property. In such cases the issues seldom give a correct idea as to the length of time that would be required during trial. The issue of completion of title in the Defendant by twelve years' adverse possession is common to most cases. In some the issue is decided in three or four hours, while in others it takes up several days. One matter connected with the subject of issues does not seem to have been brought to the notice of the Committee. Or. XX, r. 5, C. P. C., enacts that in every judgment where issues have been framed, a separate decision must be given on each issue. The manifest object of the rule was to prevent jumbling up of decisions of several issues together, which makes the work highly unsatisfactory. But the general nature of the rule has led to divergence of views as to whether the rule applies to those cases which are finally tried ex parte even though issues had been framed. The practice of the Courts is not uniform, though more often than not those issues are not considered which were raised at the instance of the Defendant who subsequently fails to appear. It would be hard on the Plaintiff to ask him to prove that the contentions raised by the Defendant, since absent, are untenable. The Defendant may himself have thought it futile to contest. Moreover, the liability of the Plaintiff to have the case re-tried on sufficient ground for non-appearance being shown by the Defendant will remain the same, however completely he may have proved the genuineness of his claim and the falsity of the defence. The rule of procedure should be made clear for such cases.

SIR,

I beg to draw the attention of the Hon'ble Legal Remembrancer and also of the Secretary to the Government of Bengal through the medium of your journal for an interpretation of the Circular No. 5996J, dated 25th September 1923, of the Government of Bengal read with High Court Circular Orders Nos. 11 and 12 of Chap. IV. I shall be highly obliged if any of your readers kindly enlighten me whether a similar practice as stated below is in vogue at other places too.

On 9th May last an application was made by me for converting an uncertified copy taken on 28th March 1919 into a certified copy for which in addition to court-fees payable under Art. 9 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act for certification, one anna per folio was realised from me in view of the Circular No. 5996J, dated the 25th September 1923 by which the price of each folio was increased from three annas to four annas. The said Circular runs thus:—"In supersession of all previous orders the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the rate of copying fees in Civil and Criminal Courts of Bengal other than the High Court shall be increased from three annas to four annas per folio with effect from 26th October 1923." Now the question is whether the additional one anna per folio can be levied for converting an uncertified copy taken long before 26th October 1923, into a certified copy after that date. The High Court Circular Order No. 11 of Chap. IV says that in case of certified copies the court-fee chargeable under the Court Fees Act (i.e., under Art. 9 of Sch. I) should be levied by affixing the necessary stamp to the first folio of the copy. R. 12 of the same chapter says that uncertified copies may be converted into certified copies after comparison with originals upon the application of the person to whom they have been granted and upon his filing with such application the necessary court-fee stamps required by law. From the reading of the above two rules it appears that uncertified copies should be converted into certified copies when court-fees payable under Art. 9 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act are paid. There is no provision either in the High Court Circular Order or in the Government Circular mentioned above by which such additional one anna may be levied for each folio of copies taken before 26th October 1923. R. 9 of Chap. IV of High Court Circular Order provides for the charging of three annas per folio for manuscript copies which was increased to four annas by the Bengal Government Circular quoted above. Rr. 11 and 12 do not refer to r. 9 but they clearly indicate the payment of court-fees chargeable under the Court Fees Act for certification. The Bengal Government Circular also speaks of the increment of copying fees. Besides, unless otherwise provided, all enactments and rules and circulars are prospective and not retrospective. Under the circumstances I do not understand how this one anna for each folio can be levied at the time of certifying an uncertified copy taken before 26th October 1923.

I remain,

Sir,

Yours faithfully,

HEMANTA KUMAR CHAUDHURI,

Pleader, Pabna.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Right of accused to be defended by lawyer.

"The work of this Court would be appreciably lightened if the Subordinate Magistrates in dealing with the law relating to the rights of accused persons would construe it in a less technical spirit than they are accustomed to do. In the inferior Courts the right principle is occasionally reversed and a person is presumed to be guilty the moment he is accused and every attempt on his part to prove his innocence is regarded as vexatious." These were the observations of Amcer Ali and Pratt, JJ., in Sheo Prokash v. Rawlins, I. L. R. 28 Cal. 594. In our system of jurisprudence an accused person is to be presumed to be innocent unless his guilt is proved and it is entirely the business of the prosecution to bring home to the accused the charge which has been laid against him. Consistently with this policy our Code of Criminal Procedure provides that any person accused of an offence before a Criminal Court or against whom proceedings are instituted under the Code in any such Court may of right be defended by a pleader. A lay man can hardly be expected to tackle the intricacies of law which very often baffle the skill of an experienced lawyer and to withhold from an accused person facilities for securing the services of a professional man is beyond doubt a denial of justice. The legislature being fully alive to the necessity of the services of lawyers in proceedings before Courts of justice has amended sec. 340 in a liberal spirit and altered the law so as to ensure the benefit of the section to all persons against whom any proceeding is taken in a Criminal Court irrespective of the fact whether he is accused of an offence or not.

It is interesting to note in this connection the analogous liberal provision in the law of America where when a Defendant is brought upon arrest the Magistrate must immediately inform him of the charge against him and of his right to the aid of Counsel in every stage of the proceeding and before any further proceedings are had. The Magistrate must also allow the Defendant a reasonable time to send for Counsel and adjourn the examination for that purpose and must upon the request of the Defendant require an officer to take a message to such Counsel in the town or city as the Defendant may name. The officer must without delay and without fee perform that duty.

The remarks of the Calcutta High Court quoted above very appropriately apply to the facts of a recent Allahabad case (Emperor v. Pita and others, I. L. R. 47 All. 147). In this case on the date on which the accused were produced in Court the Magistrate ordered that the case would be heard the next day in the jail. The first step in the proceedings in the jail was the presentation of an application by some friend of the accused asking for an opportunity to engage a pleader and that the evidence might be taken in that pleader's presence. This application was however bluntly refused on the allegation that the accused had had plenty of time to consult pleaders since the previous day and that the Magistrate would have to send the prosecution witnesses away again. The next step was that the Magistrate examined six of the prosecution witnesses and took down the accused's statements, framed a charge and said that he would take the remaining prosecution witnesses the next day. At the end after the statements of the accused he asked them whether they wished to cross-examine. Having had their application for time to appoint a pleader rejected the accused persons who were ignorant villagers very naturally said that they did not wish to cross-examine the witnesses. On the next day further prosecution witnesses were examined and the accused were further examined and they stated that they would produce defence witnesses. By this time they had succeeded in engaging the services of a pleader who put in an application asking for another date to be fixed for cross-examination as there was nobody who could properly instruct him on behalf of the accused. The Magistrate refused this application on the ground that the pleader could get his instructions from the accused themselves. When the application for postponement was rejected the pleader verbally applied for being allowed to cross-examine the witnesses in the circumstances of the case without further instruction. This was disallowed on the ground that the pleader had no right left. On the next day the Magistrate was asked to resubmit the prosecution witnesses which he refused to do but on the subsequent date of hearing he summoned a few of the prosecution witnesses under sec. 540 as Court witnesses and when the defence pleader wanted to cross-examine them he was not allowed to do so. In his explanation to the High Court the Magistrate stated that as the defence had left no legal right of cross-examination at that stage questions of the nature of cross-examination suggested by the defence Counsel were put to the witnesses by him. The proceedings were quashed by the High Court and a retrial directed by another Magistrate.

THE REPORT OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE, 1924-1925.

VII

The Committee have condemned in severe terms the universal practice of fixing by each Court more work for a day than can by any stretch of imagination be done on that day and of adjourning most of those cases to a date a month later, when they will again be adjourned, and that of not taking up a case which has not undergone several adjournments. This system is really responsible, as they say, for (a) ineffectual control over the day's work, (b) allowing bench-clerks to fix the adjourned dates with consequent chance of petty corruption, (c) granting of adjournments on frivolous grounds, and very often for the mere asking, (d) great hardship and much expense to litigants, (e) inconvenience, beyond degree, of witnesses and (f) want of proper respect for processes of Civil Courts. They confess their failure to understand how such a practice came to be introduced and how it became so universal. Strange to say, that in those High Courts and Judicial Commissioner's Courts, where the system of fixing a certain number of cases for a definite day obtains, the same defect as in Mofussil Courts is noticed. They say that parties are likely to come to Court with witnesses if they feel sure that their case would be taken up and that adjournment would not be granted to either party except on very good grounds. In connection with that practice in the Madras High Court and the argument in its support that a long list obviates all chance of there being insufficiency of work, the Committee have said very rightly that "experience shows that cases which are very low down in the list are seldom ready if the list collapses," and that "applications for adjournments on all kinds of suspicious pretexts are inevitable when long lists of cases are posted." The Committee have not only characterised the system as a "vicious" one, but say that they are "forced to the conclusion that the practice has grown up owing to apathy." I think that "conservatism" would have better described the real reason. It requires much courage to depart from the traditional practice and to adjourn a case a year ahead, instead of a month, on the ground that there is no chance of the case being taken up in a year. Some Subordinate Judicial Officers have made some move in the right direction by adjourning cases 2 or 3 months ahead, but their subordinate position may have stood in the way of bringing about a revolutionary change in procedure. Though higher authorities have never approved of the system of fixing too large a number of cases for a day, it is doubtful if they would have tolerated an adjournment for a year. The system would never have grown up if the higher authorities had given proper instructions to subordinate Courts and had made them feel that attempts to move in the right direction would be supported. Had they taken any serious notice of the bad practice, just as they had taken in cases of piece-meal trials, the practice would never have grown up. So far as the Mofussil judiciary is concerned, it must be said in extenuation of their offence that persons in subordinate position are least likely to introduce a bold change in practice and that the tendency to follow the "beaten track," the track which had led many to posts of superior position and dignity, would be too strong for them. It is hoped that after the publication of the report of the Committee, the subordinate judiciary will feel themselves fortified in following the proposed reform. A detailed instruction of the High Court on the point may also go far.

The need for instructions as to how the day's work is to be conducted is very great indeed. The Committee have recognised it. To mention a matter in point, it may be stated that the impression is almost universal that unless there be a "part-heard" case, work cannot be commenced at 11 A.M., and that time must be allowed for petitions and "haziras" to be filed and placed in their respective records. The Committee have thought it a waste of time to wait till the sorting is completed. In a place where there is a single Court, it may be possible to begin work at 11 A.M. But in a place where there are several Courts of the same degree, it will be inconvenient to the pleaders, if cases are put up before the Judges in all those Courts at the same time.

NEW PRACTICE FOR POSTING CIVIL APPEALS FOR HEARING AT FARIDPORE.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

From the month of May last the Courts here have adopted a new procedure for the hearing of appeals. The Courts publish a list of appeals (giving the numbers of the appeals only) without fixing any dates with the intimation that they will be taken up in order in course of a particular month—the District Judge's list containing a further note that the appeals on the list of the Subordinate Judge's Court may be taken up by him. Copies of these lists are hung on the Notice Board but copies are not available as in the High Court. Apart from the question of the legality of this procedure, which will be discussed later on, this is causing great inconvenience and hardship to the litigants and their pleaders.

In adopting this new practice the Courts profess to follow the High Court procedure. But a moment's consideration will show the great difference. The High Court Benches which take up appeals have no original cases to try—they only hear appeals. In the High Court the following lists are published:—First a General List, then a Weekly List and then a Daily List. These lists contain full details—the Nos. of the appeals and the names of parties and their Vakils. So the parties and their Vakils can have an idea of the time when their appeals may be taken up. But in the Mofussil the Courts try Original Suits and Sessions cases, hear Criminal appeals and motions (Criminal cases getting precedence) and other miscellaneous matters and they take up appeals only when they are not engaged in those cases. So the effect of the present arrangement will be that they will take up appeals at their pleasure and convenience and the parties and their pleaders must be ready for their appeals at any time on any day during the month and the following months. This might help in speedy disposal of appeals but will certainly be detrimental to the interest of the litigants. It would debar the parties from attending to their appeals because they cannot certainly be expected to wait at the District town indefinitely for the whole month or more. The pleaders also will find themselves in a great fix. They cannot be ready to argue any number of appeals on any day and at any time before any and every Court. In the High Court all appeals below Rs. 5,000 involve only questions of law, so the parties need not be present and in appeals above Rs. 5,000 the parties are generally rich and can afford to wait for a week or so. The pleaders will be greatly inconvenienced in attending to their private business and in arranging their business in the different Courts and elsewhere, for with the prospect of the appeals being taken up any day and before any Court, they cannot leave the station or accept engagements on any particular date. If the High Court where in most appeals the questions involve points of law, it is not difficult for one pleader to argue for another, but in cases involving in the main intricate questions of fact as well as law, it is not easy for one pleader to argue for another without previous preparation and most of the cases being of small value and the parties generally poor, it cannot be expected that the parties will engage a number of pleaders. The cost of litigation is already very high.

Turning to the legal aspect of the procedure it seems to be not warranted by law. The High Court has no doubt made Rules for the hearing of appeals before it by publishing Cause Lists from time to time without fixing any particular dates for individual appeals. But in the absence of Rules made by the High Court, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code would govern the procedure of the Mofussil Appellate Courts. Rules in Or. 41, C. P. C., clearly show that the Court has to fix particular dates for hearing of appeals and it has been held by the High Court in several cases that dismissal for default or hearing of appeals ex parte on a date not fixed for the hearing of the appeals is illegal and liable to be set aside.

Under sec. 107 (2), C. P. C., the Appellate Court has the same powers and duties as an Original Court and Or. 17 (2) speaks of fixing of particular dates and r. 48 of Chap. I of the High Court Rules says that "no judicial proceeding of whatever nature shall be postponed sine die." Mr. J. Palit, while District Judge of Faridpur, with a view to speedy disposal and to take up appeals whenever he was not engaged in criminal work, kept a number of appeals pending sine die and Mr. Justice Rampini (afterwards Sir Robert Fulton) when he came on inspection, disapproved of the procedure and asked the District Judge to fix proper dates for hearing of the appeals. The present procedure virtually keeps appeals pending sine die.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CHAKRAVARTI, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2368 of 1922. SREEMATI BINAPANI DAS, Plaintiff-Appellant v. SREEMATI DAKSHABALA GHOSANI, Defendant-Respondent. The 26th May 1925.

Trespass on Plaintiff's wall by putting up structure—Plaintiff's right to have structure removed—Relief, if may be refused on the ground of dispute being a petty one.

The Plaintiff brought the suit in the Court of the first Munsif of Berhampur against the Defendant for declaration of Plaintiff's title to the boundary wall between the Plaintiff's house and the Defendant's house, and for removal of a privy and a hut, the roofs of which rested on this wall and for a permanent injunction against the Defendant so that she might not construct any such privy or hut upon Plaintiff's wall in future. The defence was that the wall belonged to the Defendant. The Munsif decreed the Plaintiff's suit in full with costs. On appeal by the Defendants the District Judge of Berhampur while agreeing with the first Court in declaring Plaintiff's title to the wall refused to grant consequential relief holding that the order passed by the learned Munsif went beyond the requirements of the case, that it was unseemly that neighbours should quarrel over such petty matters and that justice would be done if the present privy and hut were allowed to stand and if the Defendant was forbidden to make use of the wall in any future erection either on the same site or elsewhere. So he modified the decree passed by the Munsif and ordered that the parties should bear their own costs throughout.

Held—That the lower Appellate Court having agreed with the finding of the Munsif that the wall belonged to the Plaintiff, it was wrong in modifying the decree passed by the Munsif and in refusing to grant consequential relief to the Plaintiff. The decree passed by the District Judge on appeal was set aside and the decree passed by the Munsif was restored with costs in all Courts.

Babu Urukram Das Chakravarti for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

Appeal allowed with costs of all Courts.

REPORTS (See Index.)

THE LATE MR. C. R. DAS.

It is with deep sorrow that we record the sudden and untimely death of Mr. C. R. Das. It is about four years ago that he finally retired from the Calcutta Bar of which he was one of the leading members. He has had a meteoric career both at the Bar and in public life. He joined the Calcutta Bar in 1894. The Bar was before a preserve of British barristers, now it is the reverse. Mr. Monomohan Ghose, Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee and Mr. T. Palit had however already made their way to the forefront amongst their British competitors through sheer merit, industry and force of character. At the time Mr. C. R. Das joined the Bar, a new band of promising Indian juniors were only just making headway in the profession. These were Mr. B. Chakravarty, Sir A. Chaudhuri and Lord Sinha. The services of Mr. Monomohan Ghose and Mr. Palit were then much in requisition in the Mofussil Criminal Courts. In the High Court, barring Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, the leaders of the Calcutta Bar were then singularly able members of the English Bar, such as, Sir Charles Paul, Sir Griffith Evans, Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Arthur Phillips, Mr. C. P. Hill, Mr. T. P. Pugh, Mr. T. A. Aparcar. Next to them came Mr. R. Mitter who had an established practice on the Original Side. Mr. William Garth and Mr. Dunn though juniors to them all were both very brilliant men. The business on the Original Side as also the most important cases on the Appellate Side of the High Court were then monopolised by the leaders of the English Bar. It was just then that the three Indian juniors already named were elbowing their way into the Original Side. The only Court that was then open to a new-comer from the English Bar was the Court of Criminal Appeal and Revision and the Criminal Courts in the Mofussil. Mr. C. R. Das joined the Calcutta Bar when the prospects at the Bar for Indian juniors were not very promising. He had after graduation at the Calcutta University gone to England and did not seriously intend to take to the Bar for a career. He went to England with the object of entering the Indian Civil Service. He was not a keen student and the many attractions of life in England appealed to his youthful and emotional nature more than the daily drudgery of being trained like a race horse. His failure to secure a place in the Civil Service was taken by him with equanimity and then he decided to take to the Bar for a career in life. After joining the Calcutta Bar, like most juniors of those days, he found it much easier to get a criminal practice on the Criminal Side of the High Court and in the Mofussil Criminal Courts than to establish a civil practice on the Original Side. But his cousin, the present Advocate-General of Bengal, who is almost of the same standing, preferred patiently to stick to the Original Side. Mr. C. R. Das, however, soon made a name as an able criminal lawyer. The secret of his success was that when he was engaged in a criminal case, good, bad or indifferent, he made up his mind to win it by making the case his own. It may be said that it is this staunch determination to win that contributed to his achievements in his political career as well. He first made his mark in the profession as the defence Counsel on behalf of Arabinda Ghose in the Murari-Pukur Bomb case. It may not be generally known that it was Babu Krishna Kumar Mitter who was a near relative of Arabinda who persuaded him to take up Arabinda's case. The late Mr. Dhannulal Agarwala was Krishna Babu's pupil and held him in high regard. Dhannulal Agarwala at his request acted as solicitor in the case. This association between the Counsel and the solicitor in this sensational state trial contributed largely to the popularity and success of both in their respective professions. Although some fees were paid to them by the father-in-law of Arabinda Ghose, yet having regard to the length of the trial, the services rendered by both to Arabinda were a labour of love. Mr. Das was opposed by Mr. Norton on behalf of the Crown. Mr. Das displayed great ability in handling the witnesses in the case and much more in marshalling the facts in his final address. Arabinda was acquitted but the honours of it are to be equally divided between the counsel and the eminently fair charge that Judge Beachcroft delivered with regard to Arabinda, whose culture and scholarship had made a profound impression on the learned Judge as a fellow student of Arabinda at Cambridge. Mr. Beachcroft could not persuade himself to believe on the meagre evidence before him that Arabinda was in any way mixed up with the bomb conspiracy. Arabinda was then the idol of the people and his acquittal was followed by demonstrations all over the land. Mr. Das's fame also spread far and wide. Mr. C. R. Das's success in this case strengthened the hands of his friend Mr. Agarwala in entrusting the sole charge of the Dumraon case to him. Mr. Das made up his mind to win that case and by industry, perseverance and tact, in which he had few rivals at the Bar, his determination was crowned with success. This brought him a fortune and immensely enhanced his forensic reputation. We should not omit to mention also the Dacca conspiracy case, in which he was opposed by the late Sir William Garth, amongst the celebrated cases which he defended with conspicuous ability both in the Sessions Court and in the Court of appeal. Sir Lawrence Jenkins before whom he argued the appeal recognised his great ability as an advocate and from that time he got a large and established practice on the Original Side of the High Court. But all the same it must be said that he was at his best in dealing with witness cases especially in the Criminal and Sessions Courts. His reputation in such cases had reached such high water-mark that the Government of India retained him as the Crown Counsel in the Munition case, offering him higher fees than to Mr. Gibbons, the Advocate-General of Bengal.

This may be said to mark the turning point in his professional and political career. In his younger days Mr. C. R. Das was more artistic and literary than political in his temperament. One hardly knew what was his political opinion in those days or if he had any political opinion at all. He was, however, a great admirer of the poet Rabindranath. The poet regarded humdrum politics as vulgar. He was an idealist and an apostle of self-help. In this his close friend and near relative Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri shared his views, though from a more practical point of view than the poet. It was thus in or about 1904 that Mr. A. Chaudhuri, as he then was, decided to popularize the doctrine of self-help amongst the politically minded young men in Bengal and in this connection Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal, Mr. C. R. Das joined him as enthusiastic colleagues. Mr. A. Chaudhuri's speech at the famous Burdwan Conference was an exposition of the views of this little group who gave a new turn to Bengal politics. A weekly newspaper was started by them for preaching the doctrine of self-help and self-reliance for our national regeneration. Mr. Pal used to do most of the writing and Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri and Mr. C. R. Das most of the financing and the management was taken charge of by Babu Kumar Krishna Dutt, the well-known solicitor. In 1905 came on Lord Curzon's Partition of Bengal. After all representations and reasons against the partition had failed, the Swadeshi movement which followed heralded the birth of modern nationalism in Bengal. In this all-engrossing national movement all other individual ideals of nationalism were absorbed and the whole of Bengal felt, thought and acted as one man. Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri consistently with his doctrine of self-help and self-reliance threw himself heart and soul in the organisation of the National Council of Education and actively co-operated in the promotion of indigenous industries. At this time Mr. C. R. Das's sympathies with the movement were pronounced but he took not much prominent part in it. His activities were then more confined to the legal profession in the course of which he appeared on the popular side in many State trials, in some professionally and in others for the ends of justice. As a political idealist his sympathies, however, drifted towards the school of politics founded by Arabinda. But his position in the new party was more that of a passive supporter than as an active promoter of it.

It was, however, the non-co-operation movement of Mahatma Gandhi that drew Mr. C. R. Das prominently out in the field of politics. He accepted the doctrine of non-co-operation in so far as it lent support to his long cherished ideals of self-help and self-reliance, but he was by no means an out and out supporter of the triple boycott. Mr. Das had seldom attended or taken any active part in the Indian National Congress before Mahatma Gandhi gave a new turn to its activities. In one matter Mr. Das, however, went farther than even Mr. Gandhi and that was when at Amritsar he moved for the total rejection of the Reforms of 1919, though Mr. Gandhi was then in favour of working it. It might be through Mr. Das's influence that Mr. Gandhi included the Council boycott in his non-co-operation programme. Although Mr. Das regarded the Reforms of 1919 as inadequate, unsatisfactory and disappointing yet we doubt whether he ever seriously believed that the triple boycott would be an effective means of winning Swaraj. He expressly declared in a speech at the College Square before he left for Nagpur that the boycotting of Colleges and Schools and the law Courts did not commend themselves to him. But at the Nagpur Congress the influence of Mahatma Gandhi was so supreme that he had no alternative left but to get committed to the triple boycott, if he at all wished to continue in the Congress. He returned to Calcutta committed to the policy of an out and out non-co-operator and, like the man of honour that he was, gave up his practice at the Bar definitely and called upon the students to non-co-operate and give up their studies at the Government Schools and Colleges. We deplored then and still deplore what he did in this connection but we cannot at the same time help admiring him for carrying out the vow of renunciation that he had adopted at Nagpur through stress of circumstances and perhaps, against his own personal free will, to the very letter and spirit of it. The giving up of his profession reduced him from affluence to poverty and this colossal sacrifice alone was sufficient to raise him in the high estimation of his people. Although he inflicted on his own self this self-denying ordinance yet he did not surrender his will to the masterful will of even Mahatma Gandhi. Nevertheless he faithfully carried out the command of his leader in boycotting the visit of the Heir to the Throne, and for calling out volunteers to aid him in Congress work, was arrested and sent to prison. Had he, on this occasion, cared to defend himself by giving the go-by to the then prevalent doctrine of non-co-operation, he would, we have reasons to believe, never have been committed to prison. He was to have presided at the Ahmedabad Congress during the ensuing Christmas Vacation, but owing to his imprisonment and the refusal of Mahatma Gandhi to negotiate with the Government in spite of Mr. Das's willingness to do so, the Ahmedabad Congress ended in a fiasco and the chances of further constitutional progress of India that would have surely followed were wrecked.

Mr. Das might have been an idealist but he was not a visionary. Mr. Das appears to have adopted the policy of Council boycott at Nagpur as a provisional measure in deference to the opinion of the majority but his subsequent conduct shows that he was opposed to this item of the non-co-operation programme. Presiding over the Gaya Congress he declared himself in favour of Council entry, although it be for the ostensible purpose of wrecking the Council. We shall not enter into the merit of his idea or ideals but it must be said that he displayed great courage and self-confidence in sticking to his guns and getting a large following at the next Delhi Congress to accept his views in this respect. He lost no time in making his position secure and unassailable by carving the Swaraj party out of the Congress. He showed both genius and great generalship in thus consolidating his position against his opponents. He was naturally accepted as the leader of the new party and ultimately he succeeded in making the Congress a mere annexe to his party organisation. The man who had thus succeeded in making himself the leader of the most powerful political organisation in India was unquestionably a man of great ability and resourcefulness. It may be that his methods did not always commend themselves to some of the best minds of India but all the same one cannot help admiring his energy, courage, singleness of purpose and power of organisation and his dogged determination to win in fight with his opponents, be it in the Congress or Council Chamber. He threw himself into the vortex of the non-co-operation movement to wrest the lead out of the hands of one of the greatest of idealists and leaders of men of modern times. Undaunted by defeat, with supreme confidence in himself and with indomitable will, he gained the day and Mahatma Gandhi yielded to him with a magnanimity, all his own, and left Mr. Das to carry out his political programme unhampered.

Mr. C. R. Das was no doubt a man of great personal ambition but his love of his motherland and desire to see his country and its people take an honourable place amongst the free nations of the world was genuine and unbounded. It is from this point of view and not from his achievements in the region of practical politics that he has to be judged. It may be that the policy of obstruction and destruction that he followed have yielded no great practical results and, in some cases, might have produced the contrary effect to what he desired; his policy in the Council might not have brought him any nearer to Swaraj; but no one can deny that never before has any political leader fought autocracy with so much courage and resourcefulness. He gave up the ease, comfort and luxury to which he was lifelong accustomed and spared himself no trouble, pain, risks even to life through break-down of health or otherwise, in carrying out the self-denying mission that he had made the very breath of his life. Failures did not discourage him but only urged him on to further action. With his keen intelligence he scanned its cause, changed his tactics and adopted a new plan of operation.

On the eve of his last victory at the Budget meeting of the Bengal Council, when we met him in the lobby during an interval of recess and enquired about his health, he wofully replied that what he had recouped by his prolonged rest at Patna had been taken out of him by the physical and mental strain of the past few days and that he was afraid that he would not be able to stand it for any length of time. This was in the middle of March last and he must have felt then, and afterwards that with the heterogeneous elements he had to work with he could not carry on his policy of obstruction to any more fruitful issue. It must have been from this feeling that he made a pronouncement of a change in his policy from one of obstruction to honourable co-operation at the Faridpur Conference. We do not regard his last pronouncement in the light of a climb down or a sign of weakness but as a mark of the strength and courage which made him such an outstanding personality amongst the political leaders of India. He knew that this declaration of a new policy would meet with violent opposition and opprobrium amongst a large section of his own followers. Knowing all this, that he fearlessly gave expression to the mature views at which he had arrived, after five years of bitter experience which he had acquired at the sacrifice of all that was dear to him in life, has raised him more than ever in our high esteem as a leader of men. It is a thousand pities that he did not live to carry out his new policy. He would not surely have found it a bed of roses and one does not know that his work might not have collapsed any moment in the thankless task that he had just chalked out for himself. We have said that he was a votary of art and literature in his youth and his exit from all honours and glory at the climax of his career has been quite appropriately dramatic and full of the pathos of a great tragedy. He died the death of a hero and his mortal remains have received a fitting ovation from those for whom he lived, worked, suffered and died. It is therefore with great sorrow and profound admiration for his exemplary sacrifice and the other manly qualities of his character that we pay this our humble homage to his memory.

CENTENARY BY THE CALCUTTA BAR LIBRARY CLUB.

On Monday the 15th June last the centenary of the Calcutta Bar Library Club was celebrated at a dinner given by the members of the Club at the Dalhousie Institute at which most of the members of the Club were present and the Hon'ble Chief Justice and his brother Judges, the Registrars on the Original and Appellate Sides of the Court and the Sheriff of Calcutta attended as guests of the Bar. Felicitous references regarding the origin of the Bar Library Club and the noble traditions of the Bench and Bar at Calcutta were made by the Advocate-General, Mr. S. R. Das, in a very appropriate speech in proposing the toast of the guests. We give below a full text of his speech. An extempore reply was given by His Lordship the Chief Justice in which he expressed his warm appreciation of the past and present services of the Calcutta Bar in the cause of administration of justice and its sturdy independence and noble traditions. His Lordship also enlivened the assembled company with many humorous references to his experiences at the English Bar. As according to the traditions of the Bar no press reporters are admitted at any of its functions, we regret very much that we are unable to reproduce the speech of His Lordship, the Chief Justice in full and have to satisfy ourselves by giving only a very brief resume of it. We offer our hearty congratulations to the members of the Bar Library Club and wish them and their Club a prosperous and a glorious future during which we hope they will enhance their fame far and wide and keep up the noble traditions of independence and devotion to duty which have built up for it its present position in the course of the last century, as the premier Bar in India.

The Advocate-General, Mr. S. R. Das, in proposing the toast of the guests said :—

It is now my pleasant duty to propose the toast of our guests. This is an unique occasion in the history of the Bar Library Club, not likely to recur in the lifetime of any of us present here. It is only fitting that after a century of association between the members of the Club and the Bench, we should have among our guests to-night the Chief Justice and the Judges of the High Court, the present repositories and guardians of those great traditions which our association together have gradually built up and which have made the Calcutta High Court the premier High Court and the Calcutta Bar the premier Bar in India. The unique position which the Calcutta High Court occupies is mainly due to the fact that both the Bench and the members of the Club have always recognised that for the proper administration of justice an independent Bar is as necessary as an independent judiciary.

A century ago to-day the Bar Library Club was formed with ten practising barristers and six high officers of the Court, four of whom were also members of the Bar. I do not propose to take you through the history of the Club, many somewhat inaccurate versions of which have appeared in the newspapers and a correct version of which you will find on the book which has been placed before you to-night. But we would be wanting in gratitude if we let this occasion pass without paying a tribute to the pious memory of Longueville Clarke, the real founder of our Club. It is due entirely to his foresight and public spirit that the Club came into existence and but for his unselfish devotion to its interests, the Club would have ceased to exist long ago and we would not be celebrating to-day its centenary. He was a junior of about 2 years' standing when he founded the Club and for the first 37 years of its existence he was its life and soul. By 1862 when he left India he had placed the Club on a firm foundation and we are now reaping the benefit of his labours. His name will continue to be connected with the Bar Library and the High Court so long as they exist, for the present High

When the Supreme Court was established in 1774, it started with only one barrister in its rolls, Thomas Ferrer, who later defended Nand-cooman. There was no Advocate-General. Sir John Day who had been appointed to that post remained content with being knighted or, to use the words of King George when he knighted him, "turning day into night" and never came out. Newman, the first de facto Advocate-General came out later in the year. It is difficult to realise at the present day that at one time there was not a sufficient number of barristers to carry on the work of the Court and the Supreme Court was obliged to admit as advocates men who had not been called to the Bar. In 1825, when the Bar Library was founded there were only 10 practising barristers. Even in 1862, when the High Court was established there were only about 25 practising barristers. What happy days they must have been for the members of the Club. No dreary waiting for work!

But if work was plentiful in those days had its inconveniences. In these days of modern amenities it is difficult to form a picture of the conditions under which our predecessors lived. There were no electric fans. Ice was difficult to procure and as for mosquitoes they are as nothing now compared to what they were in those early days. You have all probably heard of the custom which prevailed of covering one's lower limbs with paste board to guard against the attacks of those insects, but I doubt if you have heard of the legal advice on the subject tendered to the first Lord Minto when he came out as Governor-General. To prevent mosquitoes from attacking him, he was advised by his Advocate-General to always take care to have at his side at table a freshly arrived young lady from Europe. The mosquitoes, he was told, would then leave him alone for fresh food and pastures new. Sir Evans Cotton in his Calcutta Old and New names the Advocate-General who tendered this advice as a Mr. Smith. But no Smith, so far as one can find, has even been honoured with a patent of appointment as Advocate-General, but that does not necessarily detract from the truth of the story.

As for ice, can you now, with your cheap and plentiful supply of ice, appreciate the words of Colesworthy Grant written in 1849? Writing of the then new arrangement for the supply of ice at 3 annas per seer, he says, "I will not talk of nectar or elysium, but I will say that if there be a luxury here, it is this, it is this." It was to Longueville Clarke again that Calcutta was indebted in those days for the supply of ice. He arranged to have it brought by ship all the way from Boston in America and kept in a house specially built for it in Hare Street.

Many of us here can remember the days when we had to depend on the tender mercies of the sleepy punka-puller for some alleviation from the heat, but those who have experience only of the electric fan, can hardly realise the inconvenience and the loss of temper of which the punka-wallah was the cause.

On this centenary of the Bar Library Club our thoughts naturally go back to the great giants at the Bar, who have made the Calcutta Bar what it is now.

Sir James Colville, who came out as Advocate-General and became Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and later a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

William Ritchie, a great lawyer who subsequently became Advocate-General whose letter defining the duties of the Advocate-General and Standing Counsel is still in existence. Thomas Hardwicke Cowie, who became Advocate-General the same year that the High Court was established and who has left a reputation behind him second to none as a great lawyer and an advocate.

John David Bell, Richard Doyne, Joseph Graham and Sir Charles Paul who occupied the position of Advocate-General for 29 years, the longest period that any member has held that post and who died at the very hour at which his resignation was to take effect. J. T. Woodroffe, Sir Griffith Evans, Monomohan Ghose, W. C. Bonnerjee, Arthur Phillips, T. A. Apcar, C. P. Hill, T. Palit, A. M. Dunne, and William Garth, Asutosh Chaudhuri were giants in their days and have left an indelible mark in the history of the Club and the Calcutta Bar. Is it a matter of surprise that the Calcutta Bar should occupy the position it does?

I have not mentioned William Jackson, familiarly known to all as Tiger Jackson. He is happily still with us and serves to remind us of the days when the Bar at Calcutta was at its height of fame. A man of strong independence of character, always jealous of the honour of the Bar, fearless in his advocacy and as a man of the most generous disposition, we are all proud of him and rejoice that he is still one of our members. It is a matter of regret to all of us that he is not present here to-night.

There is another name which requires special mention, though he is no longer a member of the Club. Lord Sinha was not only a great lawyer and Advocate and a staunch upholder of the traditions of the Bar, but no member of the Club has created so many records or attained a career like his. There have been members of the Club who have been members of the Viceroy's Council, but none, like Lord Sinha, has had the honour of a peerage conferred on him or attained the position of an Under-Secretary of State or a Governor of a Province.

The Supreme Court was composed of a Chief Justice and 3 puisne Judges though in practice there were only two, one generally managing to depart for a climate which it is hoped was cooler. At present we have our Chief Justice and fourteen Judges. The Chief Justice has always been a barrister in considerable practice in England. Of the puisne Judges those who come from England bring with them a freshness of view and the great traditions of the English Bar; the members of the Civil Service who attain to the Bench do so by hard work, and outstanding ability and bring with them a knowledge of conditions prevailing in the Districts. It is only those who have the longest practice among the Vakils become our Judges and they add to the Bench their wide experience of law and practice. I say nothing of those members of the Bench who have been members of our Club. They are our men and of course must make the best Judges.

Of the present members of the Club I cannot obviously speak, but an irreverent Junior ambitious of being appointed our Poet Laureate, has furnished me with an estimate of our character and abilities which I will now read to you.

This is a proud day for us, a day of rejoicing. A day full of memories of our glorious past and of resolve that the future shall be even more glorious. We welcome amidst us to-night our Chief Justice and the Judges who are the inheritors and up-holders of the great traditions of the Bench to whom we look for that sympathy and encouragement which they have always extended to us. The position of the Sheriff, who has also kindly accepted our invitation, is as old as that of the Bar. We also extend our welcome to Mr. Remfry and Mr. Stork, who hold the two highest offices in Court.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE

SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON AND THE BAR.

Replying on behalf of the guests, the Chief Justice said that they had assembled on the occasion of a very interesting event. The Bar of the Calcutta High Court had been the most important element in the administration of justice in this Province. He could say with confidence that they could not have a better Bar than they had at present. The relations between the Bench and the Bar had been most cordial—he might almost say, jovial. (Laughter.)

The Calcutta High Court was the premier High Court in India and the Calcutta Bar the premier Bar. (Applause.)

In 1828, there were between 90 to 100 cases in the Court, now there were something between three and four thousand a year.

After predicting a brilliant future for the profession, Sir Lancelot dwelt on the expansion of which the Court stood in need. At present, sufficient accommodation could not be found for the eighteen judges; and the offices were over-crowded. In the circumstances, it would not be very long before the High Court would have to be enlarged.

He had made representation to the Government on the point, and the latter always said that they had no money. "But," declared Sir Lancelot amidst applause, "in my opinion, money must be found."

TRIBUTE PAID TO THE LATE MR. C. R. DAS FROM THE BENCH AND BAR OF THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Eloquent tributes to the memory of the late Mr. C. R. Das were paid by the Bench and the Bar at the Calcutta High Court on Wednesday. All the Judges assembled in the Court room of the Chief Justice which was crowded with members of the various branches of the legal profession and the general public.

On their Lordships taking their seats, Mr. Chakravarti said that on behalf of the Bar he had to announce to them the mournful news of the sudden death of Mr. C. R. Das. Mr. Das was born of a gifted family in Bikrampur, in the District of Dacca. His father was a solicitor of this Court and his uncles and also many other members of his family were members of the profession. Mr. Das was educated when a boy in a Missionary College at Bhowanipore and later he joined the Presidency College and graduated from there in 1890. He then proceeded to England and was called to the Bar in 1894. He joined this Court in April 1894 and as it often happened, notwithstanding his distinguished qualities as an advocate, he had to struggle as every one of the profession had to struggle. In 1910 he made his mark in the Dumraon case and from that time his success at the Bar was assured and he built up a lucrative practice. But in 1921 he gave up not only the emolument of his extensive practice but his comforts, his ease, and he led a strenuous life of activity in the cause of the ideal which he had before him. This was not the time, nor the occasion, nor the place to express any opinion with regard to that ideal; some people might be in favour of it, others not, but he wished to emphasise one of Mr. Das's aspect of life. That was the aspect of "sacrifice," grand sacrifice for the ideal which he had set before him. On account of the strenuous life which Mr. Das had been leading for the last five years his health was shattered. He sought rest at first at Patna and later at Darjeeling. From all accounts they thought that Mr. C. R. Das was getting better but they were surprised to receive the news of his sudden death. Mr. Das had left his widow, a son and two daughters, all married, to mourn his loss. He also left the members of the profession and his numerous countrymen to mourn for him. He was a distinguished advocate. His was a great patriotic soul. He had the good of his country according to his own way, his own lights, at heart and he made every sacrifice for it and his last sacrifice was the supreme sacrifice of having laid down his life as a soldier in the field of his activity. They would ever remember his memory with admiration.

On behalf of the Vakils' Association, Babu Mahendra Nath Roy subscribed to all that had been said about the late Mr. C. R. Das. This was perhaps, he said, not the place, nor the occasion to dwell on the powerful individuality of the great man—the great leader and statesman who had so suddenly and so prematurely passed away. As one of the leaders of the Bar Mr. Das rose so high in the profession that he earned the respect and admiration of all by his powerful advocacy and great independence. They were lost in admiration for the noble example he set to his countrymen by giving up a highly lucrative practice for what he believed to be the good of his country. The memory of such a great man would always be cherished with reverence.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterji on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society and of the attorneys desired to associate himself with the expression of regret at the death of Mr. C. R. Das which had been so eloquently made before their lordships. A great life had been closed in death. Those who knew Mr. Das in the days of his dark adversity and watched the brilliant success that he achieved by character and ability not only in the profession to which he belonged, but in the larger sphere of life, could not help feeling a thrill of powerful admiration when, with heroic sincerity, he renounced wealth and luxury for a life of ascetic simplicity. In that thrill was lost all the differences of opinion either in regard to politics or other matters of human interest. With great respect he placed before their lordships a feeling of sincerest sympathy on the part of the members of his profession at the great bereavement that the family of Mr. Das had sustained.

TRIBUTE BY CHIEF JUSTICE.

The Chief Justice said: My learned brothers and I have heard with the greatest grief of the untimely death of Mr. C. R. Das. The news came to me as a great surprise, for it was only on Monday last that I received reassuring news from the Advocate General as to the state of his health. We have not seen the late Mr. C. R. Das in this Court for the last few years. He has been taking a prominent part in the political world. In this Court we have nothing to do with politics. We recognize that the late Mr. Das was a prominent, able and much respected member of the profession. I had the opportunity on several occasions of judging of his past activities. I think it is well known to most of his friends at all events, if not to the public in general, that he was a man of a very generous disposition. I have heard many stories of his kindness to poor students and members of the Bar who were struggling at the beginning of their career. Ill fortune seems to attend Bengal just at the present moment. It was only last year that she lost, through death, one of her most prominent citizens in the person of Sir Ashutosh Mukerjee from whom most of us hoped for still greater efforts than he had shown during his career on the Bench, in the interest of the country. Now death has snatched away another who must be recognized by all, whatever their views may be, as one of the most prominent men in Bengal. My learned brothers and I recognize that the profession has lost one of its most brilliant and most respected leaders and we join with you in expressing our very great regret at his untimely death. We shall be glad, Mr. Chakrabarti, if you will convey to his widow and the members of his family our sincerest sympathy in the trouble which has befallen them.

MENTION IN THE PATNA HIGH COURT.

At the Patna High Court on reference being made to the death of Mr. C. R. Das, on the 18th instant, the Hon. Justice Sir Basanta Kumar Mukherjee in reply said: The news which you have given us to-day is as great a shock to us as it is to you, and in a sense it is appropriate that you should have mentioned this matter in our Court, because perhaps I am now the only judge of this Court who was privileged to work with Mr. C. R. Das when he was in regular practice in the Calcutta High Court, while on the other hand my learned brother was personally associated with him in several important cases in this province, one of which occupied our time for a considerable number of months last year. I do not think it can be denied that in the capacity to marshal facts and brilliancy of advocacy, Mr. C. R. Das had many equals. He had also the gift of idealism which though generally out of place in the forensic theatre helped him to infuse a living spirit into the dry bones of a plain issue of fact, so that the characters in the plot moved on the stage as if they were living flesh and blood. That was a great gift and no doubt very largely helped him to achieve the success in his profession which he commanded at the time of his retirement. As to his other activities it is not for us to speak but this much can be said that his large-heartedness, his charity and his honesty spread the fame of his name far beyond the limits of this province and it was common to hear from people in remote parts of India that he was a man who had given up all he had to serve the cause of his country. That is a good enough epitaph for any man. My learned brother and I ask you to convey to the members of his family the message that we join with them in mourning the loss of a distinguished member of the legal profession.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Combination when amounts to actionable wrong and when not.

In the recent decision of the House of Lords in Sorrell v. Smith, Lord Chancellor Cave, in delivering judgment, has attempted to deduce general propositions of law, as to when combination of two or more persons resulting in damages to a third person or persons, would be an actionable wrong and when not. Their Lordships held in this case, agreeing with the Court of Appeal, that where the purpose of the combination is not to injure another in his trade but to further or protect the trade of the combination, no actionable wrong is committed, even though damage may result owing to the act of such combination. The Lord Chancellor in his judgment analysed the law as laid down in the "famous trilogy" of The Mogul Steamship v. McGregor, Allen v. Flood and Quinn v. Leatham, in support of the propositions deduced by him.

Our contemporary of the Law Times sums up the following propositions of law as the net result of the decision:—

(1) A combination of two or more persons wilfully to injure a man in his trade is unlawful and, if results in damage to him, is actionable. (2) If the real purpose of the combination is not to injure another, but to forward or defend the trade of those who enter into it, then no wrong is committed and no action will lie, although damage to another ensues. His Lordship added the following commentaries as "foot-notes" to those general propositions: (i) Although the first proposition is confined to a combination of two or more, it does not necessarily follow that the existence of the combination is essential to the commission of the offence; (ii) that the word "malice" when used in connection with those matters merely means that the act is wilfully and knowingly done, as personal enmity, spite, or evil motive is not an element of tort; (iii) that the second proposition assumes the absence of means which are in themselves unlawful, such as, violence or the threat of violence or fraud; (iv) that there is no question of the application of the Trade Dispute Act of 1906.

Non-direction to the jury by the trial Judge.

Our contemporary of the English Law Journal says that the recent decision of the English Court of Criminal appeal in Rex v. Thorpe (Times, April 28th), "is of importance since it has a bearing on the duty cast on the trial Judge with regard to the directing of the jury in prosecutions for murder. One of the grounds of appeal in that case was that the learned Judge ought, in his summing up, to have directed the jury that it was open for them to consider whether the facts warranted a finding of man-slaughter, and it was agreed that it was immaterial that this point was not raised by the defence. The defence in point was that it was a case either of conviction for murder or acquittal. No doubt the learned Counsel for the defence was quite right in adopting this line, since the danger of running a double alternative defence in most cases is not to be lost sight of. However that may be, it is quite clear, from such authorities as Rex v. Hopper (1915, 2 K. B. 431), which was cited with approval by the Court in Rex v. Thorpe, that it is undoubtedly the duty of the trial Judge to put such questions to the jury as appear clearly to arise upon the evidence, whatever the line of defence adopted by the prisoner's Counsel. When the Judge has failed in this duty it will be open for the Court of Criminal appeal either to quash the conviction or to substitute a verdict of a lesser offence, e.g., man-slaughter. To this rule, however, there is a corollary, and that is, there must be some evidence on which the jury might arrive at such a verdict. The Court of Criminal appeal accordingly dismissed the appeal in Thorpe's case on the ground that there was no evidence on which the verdict of man-slaughter could have been properly founded, it being the duty of the Judge in such a case, not to leave the question of man-slaughter to the jury. Although those observations have particular reference to murder cases, there appears to be no reason why the same principles should not be applied to every criminal prosecution." The same view has been taken by the High Courts in India in a number of cases.

Costs in sec. 145 proceedings.

Can the High Court in revising an order under sec. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure direct one party to pay costs to the other including the costs incurred by the successful party in the High Court? Sec. 148 of the Code runs as follows:—"When any costs have been incurred by any party to a proceeding under this chapter the Magistrate passing a decision under sec. 145, sec. 146 or sec. 147 may direct by whom such costs shall be paid, whether by such party or by any other party to the proceeding and whether in whole or in part or proportion. Such costs may include any expenses incurred in respect of witnesses and of pleader's fees which the Court may consider reasonable." A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held in Veerappa Naidu v. Ayadayammal, 48 Mad. 262, that the High Court when exercising its powers of criminal revision from an order passed by a Magistrate in proceedings under Chap. XII of the Code has no power to award to the successful party the costs incurred in the revision proceedings. Reliance has been placed on a previous decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Sankarlinga Mudalyar v. Narayana Mudalyar, 45 Mad. 913. The learned Judges seem to take the view that the decision of the previous Full Bench is conclusive on the point, but we fail to see how that can be so. The previous case referred to was one in which an application in revision was made to the High Court by a private party against an order of acquittal. This application was refused and the Court was asked to direct the Petitioner to give costs to the Opposite Party. This also was refused on the ground that the High Court has no power in a criminal case to make an order as to costs.

The ratio decidendi of that decision may be gathered from the observations of Coutts Trotter, J.: "The whole machinery of revision is a creature of statute and has to be found within the four walls of the Code of Criminal Procedure and so far as criminal cases are concerned I do not see how we can possess an inherent power in ourselves to supplement that purely statutory machinery by assuming to ourselves the power of supplementing it by the awarding of costs. It is for the legislature to consider whether the power of revision in cases of the kind that we have seen in these proceedings has not outlived its usefulness or at any rate whether it should not be safeguarded by the arming of Courts with the power at least in cases where revisional proceedings are taken by private prosecutors and not by the Crown of mulcting them in proper cases by the award of costs." We fully agree with the observation quoted above but we think that in consequence of the recent amendment of the Code the position has altogether been changed. In the first place orders made by Magistrates under sec. 145 of the Code are now subject to the ordinary revisional powers of the High Court conferred by sec. 439 of the Code under which the High Court may make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just and proper. There cannot be any doubt that the High Court may make the order which it is competent for the Magistrate to make but which he has omitted to make; in other words, the High Court can undoubtedly make an order as to the costs incurred in the Court of the Magistrate. The only difficulty is as to the costs incurred in connection with the revisional proceedings in the High Court. We think this relief can be granted now by the High Court as an incidental order.

By analogy reference may be made to the conflict of decisions which existed before the recent amendment as to the power of an Appellate Court to make an order under sec. 106 of the Code where no such order could be made by the Magistrate. In the majority of cases the view was taken that it was competent for an Appellate Court to make the order in question. The legislature has however removed all doubts on the subject and given effect to the majority view by amending sub-sec. (3) of sec. 106 in the manner required. No express provision is to be found in the Code on the question we are discussing as to cases under sec. 145 of the Code but the effect of making sec. 489 applicable to orders under sec. 145 seems to clothe the High Court with the necessary powers. This view is confirmed by the fact that in the present Code a new sec. (561A) has been enacted to the effect that nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Code or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. The legislature should however set all doubt at rest and expressly clothe the High Court with the necessary powers.

VIII

Delay in Mofussil Courts is found by the Committee to arise from inadequate application of many of the prescribed rules of procedure other than those already mentioned. As instances they mention (a) the granting of several adjournments for filing of written statements, (b) the practice of not opening the case during trial, (c) the omission to examine the parties when issues are framed, (d) the failure to utilise the rules about discovery and inspection owing to the rules being not properly understood, (e) commissions for examination of witnesses and for local investigation being unduly delayed, and (f) negligence shown by the Courts in effecting service of processes received from other Courts. It is considered that if pleaders in the Mofussil work in partnership and constitute firms like those of attorneys in Presidency Towns, commissions will be executed much more quickly and adjournments will not have to be granted on account of the engagement of a pleader in another Court or on account of his absence in the Mofussil. Senior members of the profession feel some reluctance in forming a partnership with a junior as there is the possibility of the junior partner breaking off as soon as he has secured through his connection an assured practice. When the mutual advantages of the arrangement will be understood, it may not be found difficult in practice to safeguard effectively against such a contingency.

The Committee have found that the practice is almost universal in the Mofussil Courts of examining especially in cases of a high value, a very large number of unnecessary witnesses. Cross-examination is very often extended to about six times the proper period required and the matters elicited are generally so unimportant that a reference to them during argument would make it unimpressive and is therefore seldom made. They have not been able to offer a solution for this state of things. If instead of being allowed to ask questions merely with a view to test the veracity of each of the statements made by a witness, it was made compulsory that the cross-examination should be confined only to those material facts which, to the knowledge of that party, are false, some check might be effected. If the Courts were empowered to reject cross-examination on a particular point after satisfying themselves that the materials for doubting the veracity of a statement are grossly insufficient, there will be another check. In many cases the Courts may consider a particular line of defence to have failed after a few witnesses in support of the story have been examined and it may be feasible to exclude further oral evidence on the point, subject to incorporating in the record the pleader's note of the points to be proved by each of the witnesses. An instance mentioned by the Committee is typical. A leading Counsel who had attested a Will, genuineness whereof was being questioned, was cross-examined for two whole days with a view to show that his professional income was much less than what he stated and that his position in society was not so high as was represented. Nothing was gained however by such detailed and lengthy cross-examination. A person, pleading satisfaction of a bond on which a suit has been based, tries to prove that the Plaintiff admitted before a meeting of the villagers that the bond had been satisfied. Though the witnesses hopelessly contradict one another on several material facts and though the pleader advises the party not to adduce further evidence on the point, the party insists that everyone of the 12 or 13 persons present should be examined. An auction-purchaser who has purchased a property at a very low price offers innumerable witnesses to prove that each bigha of the land in question was worth only two annas or four annas, though each of those have been saying that the nett yearly profit of a bigha varies from five rupees to ten. Such instances, though not very general, are not rare either. These tend to lower rather than enhance the respect of the public for the law Courts and tempt them to devise fanciful means for playing with the legal procedure.

The Committee think that the present system under which even senior judicial officers have to record each word of what the witnesses say not only throws an unjustifiable burden of strenuous and mechanical work upon the Judge, but it distracts his attention from the demeanour of the witness. They suggest that the Judge should only take notes in long hand. In England, this system has not given rise to any complaint. They think that in India even after the introduction of the practice, the tendency of the Subordinate judiciary will be towards over-elaboration rather than over-condensation. As a safeguard against insufficient notes, a verbatim record of the evidence kept by a pleader may, under proper conditions, to ensure accuracy, be permitted to be used in the Appellate Court. The framers of the Civil Procedure Code left it to the different High Courts to modify the existing practice, whenever they thought necessary. So, there is no difficulty in the way of this reform.

Review.

TRIAL OF KATE WEBSTER. Edited by E. O'Donnell. (Butterworth & Co.).

The case of Kate Webster, otherwise known as the Richmond Murder Case or again as the Barnes Mystery, was one of the most sensational cases of the last century, awaking wide interest because of the revolting barbarity of the crime with which the prisoner was charged as also for the amazing resourcefulness with which she strove to avoid the penalty of the law. It was tried at the Central Criminal Court, London, before Mr. Justice Denman and resulted in her conviction. The trial brought her out as a woman of primitive savagery, gifted nevertheless with a strange power of fascinating men, and altogether a grim and complex character whom students of abnormal psychology would regard as a "subject" of exceptional interest. Her crime was the murder of a wealthy lady named Mrs. Thomas, under whom she was employed as a maid-of-all-work, but the enormity of the outrage will not be realised unless it is added that she cut the body to pieces, boiled the flesh and bones before packing them up in a wooden case, offered the fat for sale, went about paying visits to strangers in the character of Mrs. Thomas whose head she carried in a black bag and exhibited herself a great deal for sometime in developing intimacies with two men with the deliberate object of creating evidence of their complicity with her so that she might ultimately fasten the crime on them.

The volume under review gives a full and verbatim account of the trial, including the speeches of the Attorney-General and Counsel for the defence, the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, objections raised and rulings given—in fact, every little detail that might help one in visualising the proceedings. The value of such accounts is obvious. The ordinary report in the Law Journals, while it gives enough materials for a proper understanding of the points of legal interest presented, has naturally to omit particulars which would help one to reconstruct the atmosphere of the Court-room and a picture of the personalities involved. Such particulars can only be furnished by full accounts to read which would be at once to see the law in practice at the hands of some of the best among its exponents and to go through a narrative of intense human interest. The report portion of the present volume does give one this double pleasure, for it is fairly exhaustive, even hints as to the demeanour of witnesses having been supplied. The "Introduction," however, a curious medley of psychology, character study, art-criticism and loose speculation about diverse things, is out of place in a legal publication and is a hindrance rather than a help to a scientific appraisal of the leading features of the case.

In Memoriam.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal has paid a very appropriate tribute to the memory of the late Mr. C. R. Das in a poem, which has been published in the public press. For want of space we cannot reproduce it in extenso but publish only the concluding lines.

Greatness leaves behind everlasting trace
Its image Death can never spoil and mar
So shall it inspire the rising race
Inscribing in their heart the name of Das C. R.

REPORTS (See Index.)

New Rules of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

On the 2nd of May last a new set of Rules of the Privy Council was issued. These supersede the Judicial Committee Rules of 1908 and the new Rules will come into operation on the 1st of January 1926. The new Rules do not alter the practice which have prevailed in the Judicial Committee in any material respect except with regard to special leave applications. Hitherto such applications could be made ex parte, but the new rule, which replaces r. 4, provides that, in future, applications for special leave to His Majesty in Council must be accompanied by an affidavit of service of notice of the intended application on the Opposite Party. This is a very important change. In civil cases the successful party may not consider it worth his while to appear when such applications are made but in criminal cases, where appeals are usually preferred by applications for special leave, it remains to be seen whether the Secretary of State for India, representing the Crown, would not appear to oppose such applications. As special leave to appeal in criminal cases is seldom given, it would be a waste of public funds for the Crown to appear through Counsel to oppose such applications.

Moral standard of public life in England.

It is often said in justification of corruption in public life, which is quite a new feature in this country, that it is not uncommon even in England. Every student of English constitutional history is familiar with the history of rotten boroughs and other political scandals of the past or of more recent occurrence. But all the same one cannot be blind to the fact that whenever such scandals have come to public notice, the British public have severely criticised them and adopted measures for their prevention. Universal suffrage was introduced in Parliamentary elections, not merely in recognition of the right of every citizen to vote but also with the object of obviating corruption at such elections. It is not possible for any party to bribe the whole nation, or for a candidate to corrupt the whole adult population of his constituency. We noticed not very long ago, that election petitions, which were a fruitful source of income to the leaders of the English Bar, have steadily declined and that after the last election at which the Labour Government was ousted by the Conservatives, hardly any election petitions were filed to the great disappointment and disgust of the legal profession.

The anxiety of the leaders of public opinion in England to maintain a high standard of public conduct in the responsible ministers is also evidenced by the strong protest in the leading organs of the newspaper press against Lord Birkenhead, our present Secretary of State, supplementing his income by his prolific and profitable contributions as a journalist. He was careful to avoid writing on Indian affairs of which he is in charge as a cabinet minister. But the Times and other leading newspapers, as also members of the House of Commons, objected to his journalistic activities on quite different grounds. Some of these were that he as a cabinet minister could get more handsome remuneration for his contributions than he would have got otherwise and that this placed him under some obligations to newspapers to which he contributed. Judging by ordinary moral standard, this may seem to be a rather far-fetched impropriety. Lord Birkenhead at first maintained that there was no impropriety in his supplementing his income by literary contributions and he meant to fight it out. But such pressure was brought on the Prime Minister by public opinion in England on the question that Lord Birkenhead had to choose between the alternative of either giving up his seat in the cabinet or journalism. He discreetly yielded and decided to give up the latter. Need we furnish any better proof of the anxiety of the British public to maintain a high moral standard in their public men?

After giving this recent instance we give below a historic one of very serious character to show how the British public have always been jealous in maintaining a high moral standard in men occupying very high and responsible positions in public life. Centuries ago, public life in England was admittedly very corrupt. Still the House of Commons of those days did not hesitate to bring its Speaker to book when he failed to maintain the high standard of this office, which has latterly been held by men who have commanded universal confidence for their honesty, impartiality and freedom from party bias. We are indebted to our contemporary of the Law Times for the following episode regarding the treatment meted out to Sir John Trevor, who held the great position of Master of the Rolls with that of the Speaker of the House of Commons towards the close of the seventeenth century. Lord Macaulay thus describes it: "In 1695 a rumour arose and spread that the funds of the City of London and the East India Company had been largely employed for the purpose of corrupting great men, and the name of Sir John Trevor, Speaker of the House of Commons, was mentioned among others. A committee was appointed to examine the books of the two corporations. Foley was placed in the chair, and within a week reported that the Speaker had in the preceding session received from the City a thousand guineas for expediting a local Bill. As soon as the report of the committee had been read it was moved that he had been guilty of high crime and misdemeanour. He had to stand up and put the question. A man of spirit would have given up the ghost with remorse and shame. Had Trevor returned to the House on the following day he would have had to put a motion for his own expulsion. He therefore pleaded illness and shut himself up in his bedroom. A Royal message was brought down by Wharton, authorising the Commons to elect another Speaker."

THE REPORT OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE, 1924-1925.

IX

The Committee strongly recommend that judgments should usually be delivered at the close of the argument and that they should neither be too long nor too laboured. They have found that occasionally the delay is almost scandalous. Trial Courts should only try to 'make the whole case comprehensible and should not attempt to "relieve the Appellate Court of any portion of his duties" by making the judgment a substitute for the record. They think that the extra cost of employing stenographers for writing judgments on dictation will be more than compensated by increased outturn of work. After such employment there will be very few judgments reserved for a long time. To argue new cases before a Judge who has allowed ten of such judgments to accumulate is "to address oneself to a mortgaged mind." Some instructions should in their opinion be issued to subordinate Courts to remove the misconception, that they are to "produce independent treatises of their own reciting all the facts as though a judgment were a 'case stated' for the opinion of a higher Court on points of law."

The Committee have recommended several changes in the Evidence Act, the Transfer of Property Act, the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and some other enactments.

About the rules of evidence it is thought that "it is time to prevent the delay caused by requiring formal proof of duly registered documents." They would like to see the requirement being dispensed with even in cases where the law requires a document to be attested. The attesting witnesses very often extort considerable money for the purpose of proving a document and sometimes the delay in bringing them is excessive. They might have considered as well the desirability of amending the definition of "secondary evidence." The rule as it exists is anomalous and inconvenient. A certified copy of a registered deed of conveyance is nothing more than a copy of the Sub-Registrar's copy of the original document. If that can be used as evidence, there is no good ground for rejecting copies prepared from the Court's copies of sale certificates, probates, succession certificates, etc. There is certainly no presumption of greater accuracy in the copies granted by Sub-Registrars than by a District Judge's office. Record-of-rights is printed. One copy, which is termed the original, is kept in the Collector's office while those supplied to the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Munsif are stamped as certified copies. There is not much force in the argument that copies prepared from the Collector's copy are more authentic than those prepared from the other printed copies. The Committee suggest that the definition of "public documents" should be made more comprehensive so as to include written statements, petitions and affidavits. The definition may also be made to include road-gate returns, reports of process-servers and of officers of the Court, a post-master's receipt, endorsements of refusal by addressee of a letter, money order, etc., made by a postal peon, and similar other documents. Tenants find it very difficult to prove that a rent-roll supplied by the landlord to the Cess Revaluation Officer, was really signed by the landlord or by his duly authorised agent. Where a document is supplied by a person under some statutory obligation to a public officer, he ought not to be allowed to escape from the consequences of his own false statements merely by resorting to the device of getting his signature written by another person. The rule enacted in sec. 83, to the effect that maps prepared by the Government for the purpose of any case must be proved to be accurate, leads to great inconvenience, without any corresponding advantages. The evidence of accuracy must be of a formal nature as the witness brought at an inordinate expense has merely to say that the things were done as were represented by him in the map. At any rate, such requirement can safely be dispensed with in those cases where the Court has accepted the correctness of the map. What weight should be attached to a map must depend on the circumstances of each case.

The Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, exempts forty-four classes of suits from the operations of the Act. The Committee think that the following classes of suits need not be so exempted:—(a) ejectment after expiry of a term of a written lease, (b) suits on simple mortgage in which the mortgagors are the only Defendants, (c) suits for all classes of rent, (d) contribution suits, (e) suits to set aside attachment of movable property, (f) suits for mesne profits, (g) suits to recover damage caused by trespassers even when criminal offences accompany the action, and (h) suits to recover maintenance based on a written instrument, and some others of minor importance. The attention of the Committee was probably not drawn to a defect in the Act, which is not only anomalous but which gives rise to a serious delay. It is now well-established that under the enactment, a suit of the summary nature, even if wrongly entertained as an ordinary suit, may be tried under the summary procedure, but that a suit of the summary nature valued at Rs. 5 filed as an ordinary suit before an Officiating Munsif during the absence on leave of a Munsif vested with Small Cause Court power up to Rs. 250, cannot be tried under the summary procedure on his return to duty. This restriction ought to be removed.

THE LAW OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS IN BRITISH INDIA. By P. Duraiswami Aiyangar, B.A., B.L., Assisted by S. Rangaswami Aiyangar, B.A., B.L. and P. Chakrapani Aiyangar, B.A., B.L. Second Edition. Published by P. Chakrapani Aiyangar, B.A., B.L. Madras, 1924. Price Rs. 20.

A new edition of the only standard Indian work on the subject must be very welcome at this juncture when the re-modelling of Municipalities and other local bodies on more democratic lines ushered in by the Reforms of 1920 is bound to have important consequences on the working and administration of these bodies. We share the publisher's regret that Mr. P. Duraiswami Aiyangar, the author of the original treatise, has not lived to see the publication of this second edition of his work, of which fortunately he lived long enough to complete the manuscript—all except two new chapters on education and town planning. Although the general arrangement of the chapters has been retained, substantial modifications have been made in the text, necessitated by far-reaching legislative changes in the several provincial and urban Municipal statutes, and the chapter on election practically re-written. The great merit of the work lies in the success with which materials derived from English and American text-books and decisions have been utilised to illuminate the various topics arising for consideration in Indian enactments from the Indian point of view. That the decisions of the Indian Courts, those of the Privy Council in Indian cases inclusive, have been duly embodied in the text goes without saying. The work is voluminous, but the arrangement is throughout logical, and the references and citations, so far as we have been able to test, exhaustive and accurate. These features will specially commend it to lawyers, but the work will serve to guide and assist rate-payers and Municipal Councillors also and others concerned in dealing with the constantly recurring problems of Municipal administration. The high standard of industry and accuracy and the insight which marked the preparation of the first edition has been maintained in the present edition.

THE LAW OF TRANSFER (INTER VIVOS) IN BRITISH INDIA. By Lal Gopal Mukerjee, B.A., LL.B., Additional Judge, High Court of Judicature, Allahabad. R. Cambay & Co., Calcutta, Madras, 1925.

This is a text-book based mainly on the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and judicial decisions bearing thereon, but as the provisions of that Act do not completely cover all the topics which come under the description of law of transfer, inter vivos, the author has had frequently to travel beyond the limits of the enactment. The chapters on "settlement," "family arrangement," "compromise of doubtful rights" and "procedure" are instances in point and they serve to fill up gaps left by the legislature. The Transfer of Property Act is a very fragmentary piece of legislation—much of which again has very little bearing on the facts of Indian life. We welcome this treatise as the first attempt towards a more rational and comprehensive treatment of the subject with reference to Indian needs than is offered by the Transfer of Property Act. Its value to students of law and to lawyers is obvious. We would however specially commend it to those who interest themselves in legal reform and specially in the reform of the law as embodied in the Transfer of Property Act. It is a scholarly work, handy for use by lawyers and not too heavy for the law student.

By S. C. Sarkar, B.L., Bengal Civil Service (Judicial). Fourth Edition, Calcutta. M. C. Sarkar & Sons, 90-2A, Harrison Road, 1925.

The book is growing with each successive edition, keeping faithful however to its original ideal of providing a handy manual of practice for use in Mofussil Civil Courts. The first three parts deal successively with matters contained in the Civil Procedure Code, the Rules and Circular Orders, etc., of the High Courts and other enactments; the fourth concerns examination of witnesses and the fifth and last contains forms and precedents. Much of the work has been re-written and if it runs any risks, it will be owing not to shirking labour on the part of the compiler, but to over-elaboration.

THE LAW OF COMPULSORY LAND ACQUISITION AND COMPENSATION. By S. G. Velinker, Barrister-at-Law. Price Rs. 15.

Mr. Velinker has made his mark as an annotator by his compact little volume on the law of gaming and wagering, and having been president of the tribunal of appeal under the City of Bombay Improvement Act, he has not allowed the experience and insight he gathered from his incumbency of that responsible office to pass without fruits, and the result is the present treatise, which is a very wide-awake, able and reasoned commentary on the several enactments authorising and regulating compulsory acquisition of lands, e.g., the Land Acquisition Act, the Land Acquisition (Mines) Act and the relevant provisions of the many Municipal and Town Improvement Acts and of the Indian Railways Act. Complete mastery of the underlying principles and a capacity for felicitous presentation within the briefest compass distinguish Mr. Velinker's commentaries. The subject-index itself is an indication of the thoroughness with which the details of the subject have been rationalised for the purpose of presentation. Altogether, it is a most reliable guide to, and commentary on, the law of compulsory acquisition of land in British India.

REPORTS (See Index.)

The late Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur.

It is with deep sorrow that we record the death of Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur, which took place on Friday, the 3rd of July last. He was for long very intimately connected with our journal and reports. In fact he was our chief reporter on the Appellate Side of the Court as Mr. S. R. Das, the present Advocate-General, was the chief reporter on the Original Side of the Court, at the very start of the journal. For many years Mr. Sen was a member of our staff and rendered us very valuable assistance in conducting our journal. It was only a few years ago when he became too busy to attend to the reporter's duties that he gave up the work. But he continued to take interest in the journal and we always received very valuable help from him. He made a special study of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the land-laws of Bengal and came to be recognised as an authority on the same. His annotated edition of the Bengal Tenancy Act has passed through many editions and is recognised as the standard work on the subject. He belonged to an intellectual Vaidya family of Kalia in Jessore, many members of whom have distinguished themselves in the provincial services, in the district Bar and in the educational line. Mr. Sen was very simple in his habits, amiable and a thorough gentleman in every way. He was a very popular member of the legal profession and commanded the respect of the Bench. He will be missed much by both. We endorse the tribute paid to his memory by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and publish it in another column. We convey our sincere condolence to the members of the bereaved family.

The Acting Chief Justice.

We convey our heartiest congratulations to the Hon'ble Sir Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee on his appointment as Acting Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court during the absence on leave of Sir Lancelot Sanderson. He is the fourth Indian Judge of the Calcutta High Court to be appointed to this high office, the first being Sir Romesh Chandra Mitter and the other two, Sir Chandra Madhub Ghosh and Sir Asutosh Mookerjee.

Lord Birkenhead on the revision of the Indian Constitution.

Sifting chaff from grain the following may be said to be the sum and substance of the policy to be pursued by the Secretary of State and the present British Cabinet with regard to the revision of the constitution of India:—

The Secretary of State for India stated in the House of Lords on the 7th of July last that no decision was arrived at as the result of the conference with the Viceroy of India and the Indian Government.

Nevertheless, the British Government would welcome and very carefully consider any constitution commanding general agreement among Indian parties. The British Government are prepared to go as far as possible to accept any proposals which the Indian Government may make after discussion in the Assembly.

The constitution undoubtedly required revision, Diarchy must be decided by results.

A Royal Commission to review the constitution might be accelerated, when Indian leaders gave evidence of a genuine desire to co-operate in making the best of the existing constitution.

In the course of the debate in the House of Commons which followed Lord Birkenhead's pronouncement in the House of Lords, Earl Winterton affirming the same said:—

When proposals are submitted by the Indians themselves, which carried a reasonable measure of general agreement among the people of India, such proposals would be carefully considered, when the time came, by the Government of India, the Cabinet and the statutory Royal Commission.

The leaders of the labour party expressed their approval of Lord Birkenhead's assurance.

Reading between the lines it is evident that whatever conclusions the Secretary of State might have arrived at after prolonged conference with the Viceroy and Governor-General of India (Lord Reading) were not considered sufficient by the Cabinet Council to justify the making of any definite recommendations for the revision of the present constitution. The pronouncement made by the Secretary of State on behalf of the Government that "the British Government would welcome and very carefully consider any constitution commanding general agreement among Indian parties" is of great constitutional significance. Those who are acquainted with the history of Dominion Constitutions, know that the Australian Commonwealth Bill was so framed at a conference of the members of the Legislature and the leaders of the people of Australia.

It was not a measure of first impression and its history is very instructive to India. The Commonwealth of Australia now consists of six federated Colonies. Its constitution was not forged in a day. From 1863 to 1883 ten conferences were held and the Federal Council of Australia Act was passed in 1885 by the Imperial Parliament. This constitution did not prove a success and negotiations for a better constitution went on. During the years 1897 and 1898, conventions of delegates from the different states (colonies) were authorised to frame a federal constitution by the legislatures of the different colonies and they met in conference successively at Adelaide, Sydney and Melbourne and formally framed a Bill to constitute a Commonwealth. The Bill was then submitted to the British Parliament for being passed into an Act. It was introduced in the House of Commons on the 14th of May 1900 and was passed with some amendments on the 9th of July following. Thus it will be seen that the constitution of Commonwealth of Australia, which is regarded as the most progressive amongst the Dominion constitutions, is only 25 years old. Mr. Harrison Moore in his work on the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia says, "The federal constitution was a popular act and an expression of the freewill of the people" and as such he assigns to it a higher place than the constitution of the United States or of any other country which has a written constitution.

We regard the constitution given to us by the Reforms Act of 1919 as inadequate and unsatisfactory. Why cannot our political parties, in the central and provincial legislatures, follow in the footsteps of Australia? If we wish to proceed at all on practical lines we must not only hold an united conference of all parties but also make the fullest use of the existing legislature to our best advantage. If the political parties in India and their leaders cannot now unite, meet and frame a constitution for India and the provinces, how can they expect to attain the status of a Dominion Government? So the first and foremost duty of us all is to promote unity in the country and entrust the leading representative men amongst us with the duty of framing a constitution that may meet with general acceptance. Creating bad blood amongst ourselves or between us and the British people will by no means further the cause of Swaraj. Here is a definite offer and if we fail to avail ourselves of it and go on indulging in mutual recriminations and wild talk and ideas we shall remain very much where we are to-day.

Tercentenary of Grotius's great work on International Law.

Tercentenary of Grotius's great work De Jure Belli et Pacis was celebrated by a banquet at the Gray's Inn Hall on Monday the 8th of June last by the Grotius Society at which there were present many distinguished members of the Bench and Bar, many learned jurists and foreign ambassadors, notably of Netherlands and Sweden which played such an important part in the remarkable career of this great jurist and intellectual prodigy. Lord Blanesburgh, who presided, very appropriately filled the chair, as his humane services for the prisoners of war and distressed enemy aliens represented in his person the high moral standard that should govern the international relations between states and which was first clearly enunciated in the epoch-making work of Grotius. Grotius knew that it was impossible to abolish war in this world and so attempted to formulate rules based on moral principles so that war may not be wantonly, cruelly and brutally waged.

He says that what impelled him to produce the work was that "he saw prevailing throughout Christendom a licence in making war of which even barbarous nations would have been ashamed. Recourse was had to arms for slight reasons or no reasons, and when arms were once taken up just as if men were thenceforth authorised to commit all crimes without restraint." International law and morality have theoretically undergone great development since the days of Grotius and were embodied in the form of a code in the Hague Regulations at the close of the last century but when the beast in man is up we are little respecters of the moral laws, as the Great European war has abundantly served to illustrate. So Lord Blanesburgh woefully said in the course of his presidential address: "It is the heaven through which salvation may come to the distracted world." The bitter lessons of the last war has not subdued, even in its worst sufferers, the spirit of strife, the contagion of which has contributed to a world wide unrest. It is the moral forces, for the ascendancy of which men like Grotius appealed to the world in his immortal work, that can alone regenerate mankind. The disciples of Grotius will do well to study the moral ideals of Ancient India and popularize them amongst mankind. What a pity that they are more often honoured in their breach than in their observance even in the country of their birth. The world was never in greater need of being guided by the precepts of men of peace and apostles of love and charity like Budha, Christ and Chaitanya.

What a remarkable prodigy Grotius was will appear from the following extracts from Lord Blanesburgh's speech:—

He would recall to their recollection some of the outstanding features in the life of Grotius, and would speak of one or two of the principles which overlay his great work, De Jure Belli et Pacis, the tercentenary of the publication of which they were celebrating. What an amazing prodigy Hugo Grotius must have been. At the age of nine he was the author of Latin verses which were still famous. He became a University student at the age of twelve. At the age of fifteen he produced an edition of Martianus Capella, whose prophecies some of them would remember, and in that book he included all the knowledge which was then possessed by the educated world of the day. At the same age he, a youth of fifteen, was included as a member of a special embassy from Holland to the French court, and at the age of seventeen, or a little afterwards, he became a doctor of law at the University of Leyden. As a poet he was the author of a work which was the forerunner of Milton's Paradise Lost. In truth, before he was twenty he was a jurist, a scholar, a theologian, and a politician, and in each of these different realms of activity he excelled. It was true to say of him, Nihil tetigit quod non ornaret, and that he was a master was appreciated by his contemporaries. One instance might be given. Casaubon, although he was an old man when he first met Grotius on his visit to England in 1613, said of him that he was the greatest man that he had ever met, and he wrote of him at the same time a letter, which had been the subject of constant quotation ever since, the terms of which might be recalled because they were exceptional. The letter was written by Casaubon on the 13th April 1613, during the period of the visit of Grotius to England, and it said: "I cannot say how happy I esteem myself in having seen so much of one so truly great as Grotius." Grotius at this time was thirty years old. The letter continued: "A wonderful man. This I knew him to be before I had seen him, but the rare excellence of that divine genius no one can sufficiently feel who does not see his face and hear him speak. Probity is stamped on his features, his conversation savours of true poetry and of profound learning. It is not only upon me that he has made this impression. The pious and learned men to whom he has been introduced have felt the same towards him, the King especially so." Might he, as a Scotsman, remind them that the King in question was James the Sixth of Scotland and the First of England, "the wisest fool in Christendom?"—so that they would appreciate the merits of the commendation.

How really great men, who are much in advance of their age, are seldom honoured in their own country and have to suffer for their moral virtues, and regard for truth is well-illustrated by the remarkable career of Grotius:—

But while to Holland was due the credit of having produced Grotius and while Holland might also claim credit for most, or much of, his work in those other spheres with much of which they in that society were not specially associated, the particular claims that Holland might make with reference to the work whose publication they were celebrating was of a distinctly negative character. She was entitled to say that, if it had not been for the somewhat imperfect supervision exercised by her warders in Loevestein prison, the work in question would probably never have been written. But more than that, in relation to this particular work he thought that Holland was not, perhaps, entitled to claim. What had happened in the position of Grotius at that time was that he, having enjoyed certain theological views which were not at the moment popular with the ruling authorities, had found himself in conflict with the civil powers and he had been tried and, whether rightly or not from the point of view of those who tried him, he had been sentenced to imprisonment for life. But, owing to the resources of his wife, a lady to whom apparently all historians united in paying the utmost homage, Grotius was smuggled out of prison in a book-box, and he found himself, after considerable adventure, in France, and it was in France, as an exile, that the opportunity came to him of writing his great book. He thought they might well doubt whether, if it had not been for that extraordinary untoward happening, as it must have appeared at that time, or the series of happenings, it might be doubted whether it would ever have been written. Immersed as Grotius was at the time of his imprisonment in the controversies of his own country, political and ecclesiastical, it might be doubted whether he would ever have found either leisure or the repose of soul-necessary in which to compose this great spiritual classic To France, which offered him shelter, and to Sweden, which, at a later date after Grotius had written his book, appointed him to be her ambassador at the French court, credit for the course of the later life of Grotius was mainly due

REFERENCES IN THE HIGH COURT.

At the High Court on Monday last before a Full Court composed of the Chief Justice and all the other Judges, sympathetic references were made by the Bench and the Bar to the death of the late Rai Surendra Chandra Sen, Advocate, High Court, which took place on Friday last.

Mr Mahendra Nath Roy, President of the Vakils' Association said:—Mr. Sen commanded an extensive practice, specially in cases involving the land law of Bengal, of which subject he was recognized as an authority. Mr. Sen's annotated edition of the Bengal Tenancy Act is treated both by the Bench and the Bar as the leading authority on the subject. His very valuable services as a member of the Bengal Tenancy Act Amendment Committee were specially appreciated by Government.

The Advocate-General on behalf of the Bar and Mr. Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society, associated themselves with what the previous speaker had said.

CHIEF JUSTICE'S WORDS OF SYMPATHY.

The Chief Justice said:—"Every one who knew him will be exceedingly sorry to hear of the death of Mr. Surendra Chandra Sen. He was one of those who, in my opinion, can be ill-spared and his death will cause a severe loss not only to the Court, but also to his large circle of friends. I was always glad to see Mr. Sen in Court, for I knew that the points which he desired to argue would be stated forcibly and concisely without any waste of time. Furthermore I was sure that if there were any real objections to the case which he was presenting he would not fail to bring them to the attention of the Court. He was well-known as a sound lawyer and in one particular branch of it he was recognized as an expert and whenever he appeared in Court he was a real assistance to it. He was one of the old school—a true gentleman in the real sense of the word, always reliable and invariably considerate and courteous. I regarded him as a personal friend and I regret very much that I did not know that he was ill, for I should have liked very much to have seen him, at any rate, once more before he died. I should be glad, Mr. Roy, if you will convey the sympathy of my learned brothers and of myself to the members of his family for the great loss which they have sustained."

At an extraordinary meeting of the Vakils' Association the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "That this Association places on record its deep sense of sorrow at the sad and untimely death of Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur, a distinguished member of the Association."

Ministers and journalism.

The following extract from the Law Times will show that we were not wrong in setting out the reasons for which strong exceptions were taken both in Parliament and outside to Lord Birkenhead adding to his income by his journalistic contributions.

Some twenty years ago the question of Ministers of the Crown as directors of public companies reached an acute stage after six years' agitation, and no surprise will be felt that in 1925 the question of Ministers as paid journalists, which we have discussed in these columns and has equally attracted public attention, should have at last come prominently before both the House of Commons and the Cabinet itself. And the reasons why, in both cases, Ministers should confine themselves to the duties of their office are identical. In the first place the country is entitled to the whole-time services of those who accept high positions in the Government; and, also, there should be no suspicion that Ministers of the Crown may be placed in a position of private obligation. The parliamentary adroitness of Mr. Baldwin in replying to the questions and supplementaries on the subject in the House of Commons this week will do nothing to allay public feeling in this matter. The principle, according to the Prime Minister, which the Government have decided to re-affirm—"that Ministers of the Crown while holding office should refrain from writing articles for publication in any way connected with matters of current public policy"—has never been called in question. That field of literature apparently only explored by ex-Ministers.

The passage that our contemporary quotes in the Times newspaper is particularly strong in condemnation of the practice. The following editorial comments were made before the question was considered by the Cabinet Council at the instance of the Prime Minister. Since then the Cabinet having endorsed the public opinion in the matter, Lord Birkenhead gave the Prime Minister an assurance that he would discontinue the practice during his tenure of office. The present Prime Minister of England may not be a very brilliant man but he is universally respected as a man of character who is noted for his honesty, probity and sound judgment. Our contemporary observes :—

The whole question is admirably summed up by The Times in a trenchant leader on the subject two extracts from which are as follows:—

The plain truth is that, if the present practice is admitted as correct, then there is no sort of reason why other Secretaries of State should abandon many of their directorships, their work at the Bar, their profession as doctors, land agents, solicitors, or whatever they may be. The one restriction left would be the obligation to withdraw from any active part in those occasional cases where their private interests and those of the State might be held to compete or to clash with one another.

It is frankly impossible to assess precisely the relative importance to newspapers of an eminent contributor and to Ministers of an additional income. What is both possible, however, and most urgently required, is that Ministers should rid themselves once for all of the whole case for any speculation of the kind. If it were clearly laid down that they are debarred from paid journalism so long as they remain in office, then there would be an end both of the injustice and of the real scandal of the present practice. The House of Commons should not rest content until that ordinance is added to the elusive Ministerial code."

Conflict of views between one High Court and another.

One High Court is not bound to follow a decision of the other High Court in the sense in which subordinate Courts are bound to administer the law according to the interpretation put upon it by the High Court to which they are subordinate, but surely the rulings of one High Court are entitled to respect and serious consideration by any other High Court. In the case of a Chief Court raised to the status of a High Court it stands to reason that in order to preserve the continuity of the current of judicial decisions the newly created High Court will follow its own decisions passed at a time when it had not the status of a Court established by Royal Charter, but on this ground the decisions of the other High Courts should not be lightly given the go-by and should be given the consideration which they deserve. To cite one or two instances, in Nga Hla U v. King-Emperor, 3 Rangoon 139, the Rangoon High Court has placed an interpretation on sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which is quite peculiar and which is not shared by any of the other High Courts in India. It has been held: "It has been suggested that a non-compliance with a mandatory provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot in any circumstances be cured by the provisions of sec. 537 of the Code and must invalidate the whole trial. I cannot find any authority for this view. . . . The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Subramania Ayyar v. King-Emperor reported in I. L. R. 25 Mad. at p. 61, has sometimes been referred to as authority for the principle that non-compliance with a mandatory provision of the Code is fatal to the trial but I can find nothing in the judgment of their Lordships to justify this view." Taking this view it has been held that non-compliance with the provisions of sec. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not fatal to a trial and the observation is made—"A positive enactment by the Code that certain trial shall not take place is obviously a very different thing from a positive enactment that in the course of such a trial certain detailed procedure shall be followed."

In Maung Mauk v. Maung Po You, 3 Rangoon 169, in a short judgment which contains no reference to any decided case it has been held that the failure to serve a copy of the preliminary order under sec. 145, cl. 1 on the Respondent and the failure to post the order on the land are irregularities cured by sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

THE STATUS OF A PATNIDAR.

In his judgment in the case of Surendra Narayan Sinha v. Bijay Singh Dhudhuria, Chakravarti, J., has followed a course which Judges are always chary of adopting and has attempted to lay down a principle of far-reaching importance. The question was whether a patnidar could be restrained from using the lands of the patni for the purposes of brick-making and making necessary excavations for the purpose. The judgment of the Court (Walmsley and Chakravarti, JJ.) must be taken to be that in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary a patni lease included a power to make bricks out of the land. But Chakravarti, J., placed his decision on a much wider principle and attempted to classify the somewhat anomalous and, for that reason, confusing relation between a patnidar and the landlord by laying down that a patni is, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the patta, a transfer of the totality of the zemindar's rights for a consideration of yearly payments instead of a lump sum. In this view, as Chakravarti, J., indicates, the land will be regarded as subject to a charge for the rent (which is hardly rent), and as security for its payment.

Novel as this view of the patni taluk seems to be, it has certainly strong reasons in support of it. As Chakravarti, J., himself points out, at the time of the Permanent Settlement, talukdars holding similar estates were regarded as proprietors and were given the option of making direct engagement with the Government. There is no reason why the permanent tenures of a later date should not be looked upon in the same light.

Apart from that, there is nothing in principle against this view. When a perpetual non-forfeitable lease is granted for a rent fixed in perpetuity, there are two possible ways in which the relation may be looked at. Either the property—a nuda proprietas—may be said to be vested in the lessor and the lessee's right may be looked upon as a Jus in re aliena with the most extensive rights. This is the view of Roman law with regard to the Emphyteusis. Or the property may be looked upon as vested in the lessee, the lessor's right being looked upon as a mere incorporeal right—a rent-charge, distinct from the ownership of the land. This is the English view.

The Permanent Settlement gave no power to the proprietor to grant perpetual leases. This power was recognised by subsequent legislation—the patni regulation. In recognising this institution which the Government of the time found growing up the legislators were not troubled by any question of the category of legal right under which the right of the patnidar should be placed. They laid down certain concrete rules for regulating his relations with the landlord.

The result was a very complex institution which united in it a great many features of ownership and some features of a lease. The result has been confusion when Courts have had to deal with special incidents of patni tenures which are not covered by the regulation.

The question was squarely raised in the case of Kallydas Ahiri v. Monmohini Dasi (I. L. R. 24 Cal. 440), in which case Jenkins, J., held that a patni was a lease, and as such it was forfeitable in certain circumstances.

This decision was quoted with approval by the Judicial Committee in the case of Abhiram v. Syama Charan (14 C. W. N. 1) and, on the whole, it must be said that judicial opinion has always looked upon a patni as a lease, though with special incidents, not exactly conformable to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

This view was put to a severe test when the Judicial Committee was called upon to decide whether a patnidar had underground rights as an incident of the patni. If the proprietary view had been adopted, there would have been no difficulty in answering the question. But the Judicial Committee when faced with the question answered it practically in the negative, holding that the mineral rights must be presumed to rest in the zemindar unless they are expressly granted, as in the case of any other lease (Harinarayan v. Srimam, 14 C. W. N. 746). This case was not clearly one of a patni lease. But the principle, it is submitted, was exactly same. And in a subsequent case, Girdhari Singh v. Meghlal Pande (22 C. W. N. 201), their Lordships extended the same principle to a patni tenure. That case is clearly authority for the proposition that in the absence of express grant of mineral rights they do not pass to the patnidar. Other cases apply the same principle to similar other tenures. In other words, in this case the Judicial Committee had treated the patni exactly as a lease.

The anomaly which this view led to has recently been felt by the Privy Council in the case of Satya Niranjan v. Ram Lal (29 C. W. N. 725) and while they held upon a construction of the patta that it had the effect of conveying mineral rights to the patnidar, their Lordships were at pains to strictly limit the scope of their previous decisions to the raising of a mere presumption. The fact is that patni tenures have generally been looked upon so long as a transfer of all the proprietor's interest that round them there have grown up a body of incidents which can hardly be fitted to the idea of a lease under the Transfer of Property Act. So soon as you seek to deal with these relations on the basis of the patni being nothing more than a lease, you are bound to find anomalies and difficulties. The Judicial Committee in its previous decisions attempted to follow a strictly logical course and and to that extent whittled down the rights of the patnidar. Their latest decision, however, shows that very little will induce them to leave the untenable position.

The point of view put forward by Chakravarti, J., offers a much simpler and a perfectly intelligible position. If the patnidar is looked upon as the grantee of the proprietor's rights, subject to a liability to pay rent and the special limitation placed on them by the patni regulation, difficulties like these will never occur. The Courts would then apply the concept of ownership rather than that of a lease to the interpretation of the position of a patnidar. There is no doubt that this view would be more in conformity with the views of the people and the older decisions (see Ali Quader v. Jogendra Nath, 16 C. L. J. 7).

No doubt the opinion of the Judicial Committee in Abhiram Goswami's case is directly against the principle laid down by Chakravarti, J., and, the underlying principle of the other cases also is that a patni is essentially a lease, differing from other leases in nothing but the perpetuity of the tenure. At the same time it must be remembered that although the view that the patnidar is a grantee of the proprietor's rights was put forward before the Judicial Committee in some of the cases, the reasons founded on the history of the land system of Bengal given by Chakravarti, J., were never considered by their Lordships. It would not be surprising therefore if, upon a consideration of these arguments their Lordships were induced to change their view with regard to patni at any rate, if not with regard to other mokurari grants. If that is done, there is no doubt that the status of the patnidar would have been placed on a similar and more intelligible footing and, if we may venture to say so, on a footing more conformable to the notions of the people prior to the decisions of the Judicial Committee above referred to.

LEGAL EFFECTS OF INJURY BY SHOCK.

By A. P. PANDEY, M.Sc., LL.B.

A runs to kill B on a public high-way with a naked sword in his hand. C, a casual passer-by, gets frightened to see this with the result that there is a general breakdown of his nervous system and his health is shattered. Can C sue A for damages? Obviously there is no physical impact, assault or battery. The nervous shock was caused by fear of imminent danger to his safety. Does the law recognise mental shock, followed by physical sufferings, as a ground of action for damages?

The cardinal maxim of the law of torts, "Injuria sine damno" prompts one to answer the above question at once in the affirmative. The word "Injuria" is of comprehensive signification and one of its well-known meanings is a breach of law in violation of another's absolute right. Every one is entitled to use a high-way and he is further entitled to perfect safety with respect to his person including mind during the course of its use. Any one using the road in a way to endanger his safety causes a breach of duty owed to another passer-by and infringes the latter's primary right. The presence of physical damages does not seem to be a condition precedent to the application of this doctrine. However, it will be interesting to trace the history of the breach of law relating to the responsibility for causing nervous shock.

Early in the nineteenth century, the law declined to assign mental shock a place in the category of injuries entitling the injured party to damages. Of those days, the decision in the case of Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. C. 577, illustrates the judicial attitude. There the action was brought by the wife for the loss of the consortium of her husband occasioned by certain slanderous words uttered by the Defendant against her imputing unchastity. Lord Wensleydale ruled that the law cannot value mental pain or anxiety and does not pretend to redress where the wrongful act complained of causes that alone. The ratio for the decision seems to be that the law can take cognisance of such physical injuries as are the natural and reasonable result of the act complained of and directly flow from such act but it will be putting a premium upon baseless actions if mental anxiety is also recognised as a ground of action for torts. Mental anxiety is a question of sentiment, more or less temporary, and it will, no doubt, be very difficult—nay, rather very nearly impossible—to assess the same in damages. On similar grounds, a father was entitled to no relief in an action for damages, founded on the fact that the Defendant had seduced his daughter. It may be a severe blot on his otherwise unsullied honour and unblemished reputation but there was no remedy in the law of torts for the deeply wounded feelings of a father, robbed of his daughter. In order to found a cause of action and to induce a Court to take cognisance of his grievances, the father had to set out in the forefront of his claim that the abducted daughter was in his service and the Defendant's wrongful conduct has resulted in the loss of such service. On such pleadings, the jury used to take into consideration the humiliation of the father while assessing damages.

This unsatisfactory state of the law continued till the close of the nineteenth century when it received an impetus for the worse on the 15th of December 1887 by the clear pronouncement of Sir R. Couch, J., in the case of Victorian Railways Commissioners v. Coultas, 13 App. Cas. 222. The facts of the case, in very brief, are that the Plaintiff was coming home in a buggy along with her brother. On the way, they had to pass a railway level crossing. When they neared the crossing, the watchman opened the gate and proceeded with the buggy to open the gate opposite to the railway. When the Plaintiff was on the line, she saw a train coming towards her at a very rapid speed. The Plaintiff's brother shouted to the watchman to open the gate at once. In the meantime, the train passed very close to the back of the buggy without actually touching her, as the buggy had just crossed the rails by that time. Thereupon the Plaintiff fainted and fell down in her brother's arms. She received a severe nervous shock and suffered from profound impression on her nervous system, the result of which was precarious health, impaired memory and defective vision. The Plaintiff brought an action for damages in respect to her physical and mental injuries caused by fright. The cause of action relied upon was the nervous shock, unaccompanied by any physical injury at the time of the accident. By the process of reasoning embodied in the fundamental rule that damages must be the natural and reasonable result of a tort, the Court of Appeal dismissed the claim on the ground that physical damages produced by the nervous shock are too remote a consequence of the negligence of the gate-keeper and therefore the Plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. "According to the evidence of the female Plaintiff," observes Sir R. Cough, "her fright was caused by seeing the train approaching and thinking that they were going to be killed. Damages arising from mere sudden terror, unaccompanied by any actual physical injury, but occasioning a mental or nervous shock, cannot under such circumstances, their Lordships think, be considered a consequence which, in the ordinary course of things, would follow from the negligence of the gate-keeper. If it were held that they can, it would appear to their Lordships that it would be extending the liability for negligence much beyond what that liability has hitherto been held to be. Not only in such a case as the present, but in every case where an accident caused by negligence had given a person a serious nervous shock, there might be a claim for damages on account of mental injury. The difficulty which now often exists in case of alleged physical injuries of determining whether they were caused by the negligent act would be greatly increased, and a wide field opened for imaginary claims." It is obvious, from the above, that three considerations weighed with the learned Judge. In the first place, nervous shock cannot be looked upon as the natural and reasonable result of the gate-keeper's negligence. In the second place, to recognise such claims would be introducing complications in the difficult question of ascertaining whether the alleged physical injuries are the effect of the alleged tort. Lastly, an attempt to redress mental injury will be to encourage multiplicity of claims. It is respectfully submitted that the reasoning is not convincing. Remoteness as the legal ground for the exclusion of damages in an action of tort means not severance in point of time, but the absence of direct and natural causal sequence.

Later the Respondent was granted leave on terms to come in and argue the appeal. He was represented by Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham and judgment has been reserved.

April 30th and May 1st.—Nowraj Rustomji Wadia v. Government of Bombay. Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes appeared for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and A. M. Talbot for the Respondent.

This appeal was concerned with a dispute as to the value of land compulsorily acquired by the Bombay Corporation for the extension of the Municipal Hospital for infectious diseases in Arthur Road. Judgment was reserved.

May 1st, 4th, 5th and 7th.—Mt. Farid-un-nisa v. Mukhtar Ahmad (Oudh). In this appeal it is sought to set aside a deed of wakf executed by a purdanashin lady. The evidence is considerable and conflicting and the hearing has not yet concluded. Mr. S. Hyam appeared for the Appellant, Mr. W. Wallach for the Respondent.

Musammatt Farid-un-nissa v. Mukhtar Ahmad mentioned in last week's London Notes was heard on the 1st, 4th, 5th, 7th and 8th May and judgment was reserved. The question at issue was whether a deed executed by a purdanashin lady constituted a valid wakf.

May 8th, 11th and 12th.—The same Board consisting of LORD SUMNER, LORD BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and LORD SALVESSEN also reserved judgment in Lal Bahadur v. Ambika Prasad (Oudh).

Messrs. Dunne, K. C., Hyam and B. N. Srivastava represented the Appellants, Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh the Respondents. Part of a joint Hindu family estate had been sold by two brothers. The Plaintiffs are grandsons of one of the vendors and they contend that the sale was not for necessity and was not binding on them.

May 13th.—Judgment was delivered in J. C. Aquilar v. Gangananda Singh. The appeal was allowed.

May 13th.—Arguments were heard and the hearing concluded in Kondapalli Vijayaratham v. M. Sudarsana. Mr. Hyam appeared for the Appellant, Mr. Lugram for the Respondent. The subject-matter of the appeal relates to the validity of a document. The document was registered as a Will but owing to the minority of the testator was held invalid as such. It is contended that though invalid as a Will the document may operate as an authority to adopt and that the registration was valid for that purpose. Judgment was reserved.

May 12th and 14th.—The hearing was commenced of Mata Prasad v. Nageshar Sahai. This appeal relates to rival claims to the Oudh Taluqdari Estates of Wali and Baragaon. In previous litigation the Privy Council have decided in favour of the validity of a Will. In the present suit the Appellant contends that that decision does not operate as res judicata against him. Further questions arise as to the effect of a compromise and as to the proper construction of various sections of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869. Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Wallach are appearing for the Appellant, Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent. Mr. Dunne is still opening the appeal.

A special Board consisting of LORDS ATKINSON, SHAW and DARLING heard the appeal from Bengal of Jacob v. Wills. This was said to be the first breach of promise case that had come before the Privy Council and it attracted a good deal of public attention.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Messrs. Barrington Wadd, K. C. and Nissim (with them Hyam) for the Respondent.

Mata Prasad v. Nageshar Sahai (Allahabad), an appeal, raising important questions regarding the succession to the Wali and Baragaon Estates in Oudh, was further heard during the past week. The arguments were concluded on May 21st and the Board will consider their judgment. The appeal was heard by LORDS SUMNER and BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and LORD SALVESSEN.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Wallach for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent.

May 15th.—LORDS ATKINSON and SHAW, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI heard arguments and dismissed the appeal from Madras in Parthasarathi Appu Rao v. Secretary of State. The question for decision was whether the land claimed by the Plaintiffs was held on a 99 years' lease or on a ryotwari tenure. The Subordinate Judge held that it was ryotwari but the judgment appealed from had decided otherwise. It was admitted that the original grant in 1846 was for a term of years but it was contended that the tenure was converted to ryotwari in 1856, but the grant, which purported to effect the conversion, was not in evidence.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham for the Appellants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

In Raja Venkatadri Appa Rao v. The Revenue Divisional Officer, Guntur, Mr. Narasimham appeared for the Appellant. The point at issue was identical with that in the above appeal and the decree of the High Court was confirmed.

May 18th and 19th.—Doddama Kom Bennepgowda v. Bennepgowda Bin Yarkangowda was heard before LORDS BUCKMASTER, ATKINSON and SHAW. This appeal which raised a question of succession to watan property was argued by Mr. Wallach. Their Lordships dismissed the appeal without calling on Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondent.

May 19th.—The following petitions for special leave to appeal were heard by the same Board:—

(1) Hari Kishun Das v. Md. Safi Jan (Oudh). Messrs. Clauson, K. C. and Wallach— for the Petitioner. Leave was refused.

(2) Rukmini K. Chakravarti v. Baldeodas Benani (Bengal). Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. W. Wallach appeared for the Petitioner. Leave was refused.

(3) Mt. Bibi Amina v. Md. Musa (Baluchistan). Mr. A. Majid appeared for the Petitioner. Leave was refused.

May 21st.—Two Boards were again constituted for the hearing of Indian Appeals.

In the Council Chamber, LORDS SUMNER and BLANESBURGH, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and LORD SALVESSEN concluded the hearing of arguments in Mata Prasad v. Nageshar Sahai and took time to consider the advice that they will tender to His Majesty.

May 21st and 22nd.—The same Board but without LORD BLANESBURGH heard and decided an appeal from Bombay, Bai Monghibai v. Pragji Dayal. In this litigation the Respondent sought to establish the Will of Vassanji Madhavji, a wealthy inhabitant of Bombay. The Appellant who was the widow of the testator entered caveats on behalf of herself and her infant sons, who had been practically disinherited. Both Courts in Bombay found in favour of the Will and leave to appeal was given under sec. 109 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Privy Council were of opinion that there was no sufficient reason for disturbing the concurrent findings of the lower Courts and the appeal was dismissed.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Douglas McNair for the Appellants.

Messrs. Fairfax Lummoore, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Respondent.

May 8th, 11th, 22nd and 25th.—In the Board Room, LORDS ATKINSON, SHAW and DARLING concluded the hearing of Maung Bya v. Maung Kyi Nyo, an appeal from Lower Burma. The hearing of this case had been adjourned owing to the hearing of Canadian Appeals. The question at issue relates to a claim for compensation for damage done to crops by the blocking of a canal. Judgment was reserved.

Hon. Geoffrey Lawrence, K. C. and Mr. Besley for the Appellants.

Messrs. Hanney, K. C. and Leach for the Respondents.

On May 22nd judgment was delivered in Sura Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandanama Pillai. The appeal was allowed.

May 22nd and 25th.—LORD SUMNER, SIR J. EDGE and AMEER ALI heard the appeal of Burn & Co. v. The Thakur of Morvi.

The Respondent had ordered metre gauge wagons for the Morvi Railway. There was delay by the Appellants in delivery and delay by the Respondent in payment. The Appellants eventually cancelled the contract and the Respondent sued for damages for breach. Questions arose as to whether time was of the essence of the contract, whether the Appellants had given a reasonable notice before cancellation and as to the measure of damages. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Sir Robert Aske for the Appellants.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. T. J. O'Connor for the Respondent.

AMENDMENT OF LAW NEEDED FOR TAXING VEHICLES NOT DRAWN BY ANIMALS BY LOCAL BODIES IN MOFFUSIL.

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

In sub-secs. (1) and (2) of sec 6 of the Bengal Municipal Act (III, B. C., of 1884) where "carriage and carts" have respectively been defined, the expression "ordinarily drawn by animals" occurs. This strange qualification, which occurred in the old Calcutta Municipal Act of 1870, excludes motor cars, motor cycles, motor lorries, cycles, tricycles, jin-rickshaws, which are not liable to any taxation or registration at the hands of the Moffusil Municipalities, District Boards, Local Boards, Union Boards, etc. Is it not an irony of fate that while a bullock cart cannot escape the clutches of tax-gathering bodies like the Municipalities and District Boards, motor cars, motor lorries and motor cycles, which generally damage the roads heavily are honourably exempt from the payment of taxes or registration fees? Sometime ago the Municipality of Krishnagar (Nadia) used to re-lieve taxes from motor cars running between Krishnagar City Railway Station and Swarupgunj (Nawadwip). But the point has been set at rest by a recent decision of the Hon'ble High Court that motor cars are not liable to taxation under the Bengal Municipal Act III of 1884.

It is needless to point out that for want of proper provisions in the statute-book the Moffusil Municipalities and local bodies have been deprived of the just right of realising taxes or registration fees for vehicles of these descriptions, which were not contemplated by the legislature in those days.

The definitions of carriage and cart given in sec. 3 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923 (Bengal Act III of 1923 as modified by Bengal Act XI of 1923) are naturally quite up-to-date.

Sub-sec. (1) of sec 3 of that Act runs thus:—

"Carriage means any wheeled vehicle with springs or other appliances acting as springs, which is ordinarily used for the conveyance of human beings; and includes a jin-rickshaw, but does not include a bicycle and a tricycle (other than a motor bicycle or motor tricycle) or a perambulator, or other form of vehicle designed for the conveyance of small children."

Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 3 of the said Act runs thus:—

"Cart means any cart, hackery or wheeled vehicle with or without springs which is not a carriage as defined in this section and includes a hand-cart."

Sec. 165 of that Act provides for the taxation of carriages and animals at rates specified in Schedule VIII of the Act, while section 183 provides for the registration and numbering of carts at rates of registration fees mentioned in section 184.

The corresponding sections and schedules of the Bengal Municipal Act are respectively sec. 131, Fifth Schedule, sec. 142 and sec. 143. These sections as well as sub-secs. (1) and (2) of sec. 6 and several other sections ought to be amended on the lines of the above-cited sections and secs. 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 186 and 187 of the Calcutta Act.

Provision should also be made in similar other Acts for the realisation of taxes and registration fees for motor vehicles by local bodies.

The attention and co-operation of the Municipal Corporations and other self-governing bodies are essential in the matter of securing these amendments, which, if made, will provide good sources of income to them.

Proposed drastic powers of Police search in England.

We notice that the Criminal Justice Bill which was referred to a Standing Committee by the House of Commons contains a provision which proposes to empower a Magistrate to issue a search warrant authorising any policeman or other person to forcibly enter and search any place or person in a manner which seems to be more drastic than the powers conferred on the police by the Rowlatt Act, now defunct, but recently revived by the Bengal Ordinance so far as this Presidency is concerned. The Bill we refer to, however, stops short here and does not seek to confer powers of arrest or detention or internment. This is so, evidently because with regard to arrests or detention without trial, His Majesty's Judges in England possess powers of issuing writs of habeas corpus which cannot be taken away except by a suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. This has never been done in times of peace. All the same it seems that the bureaucratic rule in India is promoting also bureaucratic tendencies in the executive in England. Evidently such legislation is being resorted to as a precaution against the spread of communist propaganda in England. We reproduce below cl. 30 of the Bill.

(1) If a justice is satisfied by information on oath that there is reasonable ground for suspecting that an indictable offence has been or is about to be committed, he may issue a search warrant authorising any constable or other person named in the warrant at any time or times to enter, if need be by force, any place named in the warrant, being a place which in the opinion of the justice ought, having regard to the facts disclosed in the information, to be searched as being connected with the suspected offence or otherwise, and to search the place and any persons found therein, and to seize any articles of whatsoever nature (including documents) which he may find on the place or in the possession of any such persons, being either articles in relation to or in connection with which he has reasonable ground for suspecting that an indictable offence has been committed, or is being, or about to be committed, or articles which are evidence of an indictable offence having been, or being, or being about to be committed:

Provided that a person who is a female shall not be searched in pursuance of this sub-section except by a female.

The following extract from the Law Times will show how far the above clause has been modified in committee. The substitution of an inspector of police in place of a constable has been made because it was suggested by some that the law in India in this respect was more reasonable. But the provision as has now been amended in committee is drastic enough and it is no wonder that our contemporary enters a protest against it:—

At the outset the Home Secretary moved to leave out the words "or otherwise," italicised above, thus confining the search to "any place, . . . connected with the suspected offence" and indicated his willingness also to restrict the right of application for a warrant to a police officer not under rank of inspector and to limit the power of search to the place, excluding persons found therein, and as amended the clause was carried by twenty-one votes to nine. In its present form the clause is a distinct improvement upon the original draft, but it still gives a blank cheque to the authorities to issue a search warrant in all those cases on suspicion that such an offence has been or is about to be committed. Until the present proposals were put forward, Parliament has always specified in particular statutes the particular offences for which the machinery of the search warrant is to be applicable, although at common law a justice could issue such a warrant in respect of stolen goods within his jurisdiction. Sir William Joynson-Hicks stated that there are some thirty-six Acts of Parliament already where there are these powers to issue search warrants. There are, in fact, nearly fifty, but we believe we are correct in saying that with two exceptions—the Official Secrets Act 1911 and the Firearms Act 1920—excluding, of course, war regulations—all the powers of granting search warrants are confined to cases where an offence has been committed or is suspected to have been committed. In the Acts of 1911 and 1920 the power was given where an offence “has been or is about to be committed,” and “has been, is being, or is about to be committed.” It may be that the wide powers now sought in the Bill are required for other than these two offences, but they should be specifically asked for and specifically granted. But the question is not a party one and must be approached quite apart from political controversy.

Prosecution for offence against public justice.

A correspondent draws our attention to the question whether it is competent for an Appellate Court to direct the subordinate Court to make a complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., when it has already refused to make one. The amendment made by Act XVIII of 1923 has made a great change in the procedure to be followed by the Courts in respect of prosecutions for certain offences against public justice. Formerly under sec. 195 either the sanction or the complaint of the public servant or Court concerned or superior officer of such public servant or the Court exercising Appellate authority over such Court was necessary as a condition precedent to the initiation of proceedings and when in cases mentioned in sec. 195 any Court thought it proper to move on its own initiative it might in its discretion hold a preliminary enquiry and send the case for enquiry or trial to a Magistrate. In respect of orders under sec. 476 the Appellate Courts had no power to interfere. Now the legislature has made it imperative that in cases coming within the purview of both secs. 195 and 476 a complaint is necessary to enable the Magistrate to take seisin of the case and in cases dealt with under sec. 476 the Appellate Court has been empowered to make a complaint when the subordinate Court has not at all considered the desirability or otherwise of taking action under the section and has neither made a complaint nor rejected an application for the making of such complaint (sec. 476A) and in cases where the subordinate Court has made a complaint or refused to make one the Appellate Court has been authorised to “direct the withdrawal of the complaint or itself make the complaint which the subordinate Court might have made.”

We have not got the facts of the case referred to by our correspondent before us but generally speaking the policy of the law seems to be that whenever action is to be taken it is to be taken on the complaint of the Court which holds that it is expedient in the interests of justice that such action should be taken. The entire responsibility is cast on the Court in whose judgment the facts of the case in question do or do not attract the operation of sec. 476 and in each case the Appellate Court has the power to set the subordinate Court right if it has gone wrong, in one case by directing the withdrawal of the complaint as it must necessarily be and in the other by making a complaint. The plain meaning of the words of the section seems to be that in the latter case the Appellate Court must itself make the complaint and there is no reason why it should not. For all that is necessary to be done is that a complaint should be drawn up in writing and forwarded to a Magistrate for being dealt with according to law.

The concatenation of words used, “may direct the withdrawal of the complaint” or “itself make the complaint,” makes the conclusion irresistible that the Appellate Court is to make the complaint itself when occasion arises. There may be no harm in directing the subordinate Court to make a complaint but a consideration like this is of no avail in interpreting the statute. The words actually used must be given effect to and it is absolutely immaterial whether this or that was the intention of the legislature. The Court is not to be guided by what the legislature intended to express but by what has actually been expressed by the words used no matter whether they have faithfully expressed that intention or not. The province of the Judge does not go beyond this and therefore it is that Courts have to and are bound to become technical in administering the law.

LEGAL EFFECTS OF INJURY BY SHOCK.

By A. P. PANDEY, M.Sc., LL.B.

However the blessing of the twentieth century was to give the go-by to the above rule of law and extend the legal remedy to the grievances of the recipients of mental shock. The Plaintiff in the case of Dulien v. White & Sons, (1901) 2 K. B. 669, claimed damages for illness and premature delivery of an idiot child brought about by nervous shock occasioned by the negligence of the Defendant's servant in driving a pair horse-van into the house of the Plaintiff. The Defendant, in his answer, raised the plea of demurrer that the statement of claim does not disclose any cause of action. In other words, the chief issue in the case was whether mental shock, per se, unaccompanied by any actual physical impact can entitle the Plaintiff to a relief for damages? Thereupon Kennedy, J., says: "The fear is proved to have naturally and directly produced physical effects, so that the ill-results of the negligence which caused the fear are as measureable in damages as the same results would be if they arose from an actual impact, why should not an action for damages lie just as well as it lies where there has been an actual impact." Happily, the learned Judge did not surrender his judgment to the Privy Council decision and to the considerations governing the same and held that the physical injuries in consequence of the mental shock and the breach of duty on the part of the Defendant are connected with each other by an uninterrupted and continuous sequence. It does not need any elaboration to show that there is a continuous chain of causation between the physical injuries and the tort. The wrongful act causes mental shock which in its turn produces physical injuries. But for the accident, there would have been no physical injuries.

But the rule thus laid down by the above decision was subject to one limitation. To quote again the words of Kennedy, J.: "There is, I am inclined to think, one limitation. The shock where it operates through the mind, must be a shock which arises from a reasonable fear of immediate personal injury to oneself. A has, I conceive, no legal duty not to shock B's nerves by the exhibition of negligence towards C, or towards the property of B or C." The qualification suffers from an obvious fallacy; it may be respectfully submitted, what difference does it make if the mental shock is the result of fear of harm to one's dear and close relation? How does it affect the position of the tort-feasor?

Naturally, therefore, the qualification has been eliminated in the latest case of Hambrook v. Stokes Bros., [1925] 1 K. B. 141. The case is so interesting that a short synopsis of the facts may be given with ample justification.

One morning, the Defendant's servant left a motor-lorry on the top of a steep street unattended, with the engine running, and omitted to take proper precautions to prevent it from running. Mrs. Hambrook had escorted her children, two boys and a girl, named Mabel, aged 10, to a place on the street where they were joined by other children on their way to school. They had hardly proceeded a short distance when the derelict lorry thundering down the street dashed into the children, inflicting serious injuries to Mabel. After injuring the child, it shot round a corner and was pulled up by running into a house within twenty-feet of Mrs. Hambrook, who received a mental shock caused by fear of injury to her children. Complications followed the nervous shock, as a result of which Mrs. Hambrook died. The action was brought by the husband for damages for the death of his wife caused by physical injuries resulting from nervous shock produced by apprehension of injury to her children. Referring to the limitation imposed by Kennedy, J., Bankes, L. J., observes at p. 151: "Take a case in point as a test. Assume two mothers crossing this street at the same time when this lorry comes thundering down, each holding a small child by the hand. One mother is courageous and devoted to the child. She is terrified, but thinks only of the damage to the child, and not at all about herself. The other woman is timid and lacking in the motherly instinct. She is also terrified but thinks of damage to herself and not at all about the child. The health of both mothers is severely affected by the mental shock occasioned by the fright. Can any real distinction be drawn between the two cases? Will the law recognise a cause of action in the case of the less deserving mother, and none in the case of the more deserving one? Does the law say that the Defendant ought reasonably to have anticipated the non-natural feeling of the timid mother and not the natural 'feeling of the courageous mother? I think not.' Their Lordships entered judgment for the Plaintiff.

The above case is therefore now an authority for the proposition that the recipient of a mental shock caused by apprehension of injury to a relation is entitled to damages if his health is affected adversely by such fright.

But suppose the mental shock is not followed by any illness or physical damages, can then an action lie for damages? Sir Frederick Pollock answers this question in the negative in his treatise on torts. The learned author is of the opinion that fear alone falls short of actual damages not because it is a remote and unlikely consequence but because it can be proved and measured only by physical effects.

The world is progressing fast and there seems no end of scientific researches. One inclines to look forward to the day when the medical science will be able to detect the ill-results of fright or mental shock and the degree of pernicious effect it leaves behind on one's constitution. Then mental shock, per se, will be successfully made a ground of action for damages. This would be the finishing stage of the development of the branch of law under discussion.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE, SEC 476.

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
SIR,

I request the favour of your kindly publishing the following in your much esteemed journal

Where application under sec 476, Cr. P. C., is made before a munsif for taking action under the section and the munsif after a preliminary enquiry rejects the application and an appeal is made to the District Judge under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C., can the learned Judge instead of complaining himself under sec. 476B direct the lower Court to file a complaint? In a recent case, Criminal Revision No 268 of 1925, such a complaint was filed under orders of the District Judge and the accused was convicted. On appeal the conviction was upheld by the learned Sessions Judge. Against this order of the Sessions Judge an application for revision was made before the High Court which also held that the conviction was properly had.

In the above case their Lordships did not think it necessary to go so far as to hold that the Appellate Court had jurisdiction to direct the lower Court to file a complaint but held that if there had been any defect in the complaint it was cured by sec. 537, Cr. P. C.

The above view seems inconsistent with the present law on the point as would appear from sec. 476B: " . . . the superior Court may, thereupon, after notice to the parties concerned direct the withdrawal of the complaint or, as the case may be, itself make the complaint which the subordinate Court might have made under sec. 476, and if it makes such complaint the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly."

The section is quite clear. The Appellate Court may direct withdrawal or itself make the complaint.

It is noteworthy that sec. 537 has also been amended. Cl. (b) of this section, which was— "(b) of the want of, or any irregularity in, any sanction required by sec. 195 or any irregularity in proceedings taken under section 476" has now been deleted and this change makes it necessary to look at the matter from quite a new point of view.

Yours truly,
SUDHIR LAL MAJUMDAR, B.L.,
Sattkhira.

"TAXING MOTOR-VEHICLES IN THE MOFUSSIL.

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
Dear Sir,

Permit me to point out that I join with Mr. S. P. Ghosh, Pleader, Faridpur, in his views about the amendment of the existing (rather, the non-existing) law about the Motor vehicles. I shall only refer to a recent instance in which practically insuperable difficulties have arisen owing to the non-existence of any law compelling the taxation or registration of Motor vehicles plying within Mofussil Municipalities. Of late, big Motor Lorries, fully loaded with articles for Messrs. D. Waldie & Co., Hatirjool Oil Co., and Presidency Jute Mill have begun to pass through some of the streets of Konnagar (within the area of Rishra Konnagar Municipality) Motor Lorries did not come into existence when these streets were made, so that although they were strong enough for the passage of men, animals, bullock-carts and horse-drawn carriages, they were too weak to bear the weight of heavily loaded Motor Lorries, constantly plying on them. The result has been that these streets have been seriously damaged. It is beyond the resources of the Municipality to make those streets fit for the said motor traffic. The District Magistrate of Hooghly was referred to and he has expressed his opinion that the Mill-owners whose Motor Lorries have damaged those streets are not bound to pay anything towards their repair. The position has thus become hopeless so far as the Municipality is concerned. Under the existing Bengal Municipal Act, the Municipality cannot tax the Lorry owners in any way and has practically no control over the motor traffic. On the other hand, these lorries are seriously injuring the Municipal property without their owners being liable for any damage. Seeing no way out of this difficulty, three of the elected Commissioners of the Municipality have resigned and a fourth is likely to follow suit at the next Municipal meeting.

This will show how an amendment of the law is urgently needed for controlling the motor traffic within the Municipal area by local bodies in the Mofussil.

Yours faithfully,
HARISATYA BHATTACHARYA.
Pleader, Howrah.

What is Dominion Status?

The terms Dominion Government and Dominion Status are in frequent use now-a-days. We know what it means. But if we look for a definition we find the terms nowhere defined. Such countries outside the United Kingdom of England and Scotland, which form an integral part of the British Empire, as have a responsible Government of their own may be said to possess a Dominion Status or Dominion Government. Their constitutions greatly differ from each other but the one thing common amongst them is that in each the executive is responsible to the legislature. They are practically autonomous so far as their internal affairs are concerned. But there is another element in their constitution, namely, the relationship that exists between a self-governing member of the British Empire and Great Britain, which forms the most important link between the two and is incapable of any definition. At the Imperial Conference that was held after the termination of the Great War, this imperial relationship was sought to be defined but the Dominion Premiers and delegates rejected the proposal to embody in a written instrument the constitution and the relation to each other of "the community of nations forming the British Commonwealth of Nations." Any written constitution defining such imperial relationship would have surely interfered with the autonomy of these self-governing members and their recent claims of being independent of the Colonial office and of freedom from international obligations of the Imperial Government. The relationship between the Dominion and Imperial Government is daily drifting towards a mere defensive and offensive alliance and allegiance to a common sovereign.

The Status of the Irish Free State is also essentially one of Dominion Government although the constitution formed the subject-matter of a treaty. Mr. Lloyd George when speaking as Prime Minister in the House of Commons on the 14th of December 1921 in exposition and explanation of the Anglo-Irish Treaty and of the absence therefrom of any definition of the term "Dominion Status" said :-

"What does Dominion Status mean? It is difficult and dangerous to give a definition. When I made a statement, at the request of the Imperial Conference, to the House, as to what had passed at our gathering, I pointed out the anxiety of all the Dominion delegates not to have any rigid definitions. That is not the way of British Constitution. We avoid the danger of rigidity and the danger of limiting our constitution by too many formalities. Many of the Premiers, in the course of that conference, delivered notable speeches, explaining the importance of not defining too precisely what the relations of the Dominions were to ourselves. It is something that has never been defined by an Act of Parliament. All we can say is that whatever measure of freedom Dominion Status gives to Canada, Australia, New Zealand, or South Africa, that will be extended to Ireland."

Accessory after the fact.

An accessory after the fact is a person who knowing a felony to have been committed by another receives, relieves, comforts or assists the felon, for example, in the case of murder by assisting the murderer to conceal the death or to evade the pursuit of justice. Any assistance given to one known to be a felon in order to hinder his being apprehended or tried or suffering the punishment to which he is condemned seems to be sufficient to make a man an accessory after the fact. There is a considerable difference between the English and the Indian law on the subject, the latter not making an accessory after the fact punishable as in English law. The only provision in the Indian Penal Code which deals with offenders who may be included in the category of accessories after the fact is sec. 201 which lays down that whoever knowing or having reason to believe that an offence has been committed causes any evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment or with that intention gives any information respecting the offence which he knows or believes to be false shall be punished.

Whenever an offence has actually been committed any person other than the offender who knowing or having reason to believe that it has been committed and intending to screen the offender from legal punishment causes any evidence of the commission to disappear or gives any information respecting the offence which he knows or believes to be false shall be punishable under this section. In reported cases the question has arisen as to the guilt or otherwise of a person who causes the disappearance of evidence under threat or compulsion. In Queen v. Gobordhur Bera, 6 W. R. Cr. 80, the prisoner was present when the murder took place. He was not aware that such an act was to be committed but he did not interfere to prevent the commission of the crime being apparently too much frightened to do so. He joined the murderers in concealing the body being frightened into compliance by their threats. It does not appear from the report what was the exact nature of the threat. It is apparent that there was no occasion for considering the effect of sec. 91, I. P. C., and the learned Judges Loch and Shumbhoonath Pandit, JJ., held that the prisoner was liable to be punished under sec. 201, I. P. C.

In Emperor v. Autar, 47 All. 306, the masters of the accused committed murder. The accused himself was called and was ordered to assist them in removing the corpse. He refused and they ran at him using language which meant that they were threatening to kill him or that they were threatening to beat him. Thereupon he submitted and assisted them in removing the corpse from the house to the deceased's own field when it was subsequently found.

Their Lordships said that the position was that the accused had just seen a fellow creature done to death quietly and expeditiously and his own death unless he complied with his master's order was not unlikely to follow and while what the accused did would have been an offence under sec. 201, I. P. C. if he had acted without overpowering compulsion he was entitled to the benefit of the doubt whether within the meaning of sec. 91, I. P. C., he was not compelled by threats which reasonably caused his apprehension of instant death. This is undoubtedly the correct view to take of the matter. The existence or otherwise of the apprehension of instant death must always be a matter of inference having regard to all the circumstances of the case.

THE REPORT OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE, 1924-1925.

X

The Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, was enacted with a view to facilitate quick and satisfactory settlement of disputes that might arise amongst the commercial classes. So, we find in 'contracts between traders in commercial centres a clause to the effect that all future disputes should be referred to some corporate body or some arbitrators named. It was considered inexpedient to extend the enactment to mufassil, where money-lenders and zemindars might oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts by insertion in bonds and leases of a clause that some nominees of them were to interpret the documents and to decide all disputes that might arise. So, the Act has been restricted in its operations to the Presidency Towns and the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code was enacted to facilitate arbitration of disputes in the mufassil. The Committee think that the time has now come for giving effect to the intention of the legislature that in course of time the Second Schedule was to be replaced by a comprehensive Arbitration Act. Arbitrators in commercial centres are very often hampered in their work by the unwilling party securing an injunction or a declaration of a mufassil Court, restraining them from doing their work or by his instituting a suit in such a Court relating to the subject-matter of the suit and thereby ousting the jurisdiction of the arbitrators. The Committee think that if it be possible not to prevent by legislation such suits, the jurisdiction to try them should be reserved to the highest Civil Courts in the Presidency Towns.

The Committee think that the rule in the Transfer of Property Act that mortgage and sale of lands valued below one hundred rupees need not under certain circumstances be effected by a registered instrument, has failed to protect those poor people, for whose benefit the rule was enacted, and that the ignorant and the poor find it very difficult to bring the necessary evidence of possession to Court. They think therefore that the exemption should be removed. They would allow however the unregistered instrument to be used in evidence in suits to enforce specific performance of the contract. They recommend that the rule requiring attesting witnesses to a mortgage-bond to see execution of the deed before attestation may be modified so as to bring it on the same line as in the case of Wills, where admission of execution by the testator is considered sufficient for witnesses to attest.

It is considered desirable, that registration should be made compulsory in all contracts of partnership where the principal sum exceeds Rs. 500, and that non-registration should debar a partner from suing for accounts, but will not interfere with the rights of third persons. An exception is proposed to be made in the case of a partnership confined to members of a joint family.

The very limited right of a Hindu female heir and the uncertainty of the person who will be the reversionary heir at the time of her death, have been responsible for inadequate price of properties sold by her and for a large mass of intricate litigation, some of which are instituted several decades after the sales. The Committee propose to restrict the right of suit to a period of 12 years from the date of the alienation and that the reversioner then alive should be considered as the representative of the person to whom the estate may ultimately revert. They suggest that for the purpose of saving limitation of a debt, payments of interest should not be recognised unless endorsed in writing by the debtor, as is the rule in the case of part payments of principal, and that for summary suits under Art. 3 of the Limitation Act in the High Courts to recover liquidated damages, the period of limitation should be increased from 6 months to 3 years. The period of limitation is proposed to be reduced from 3 years to one year in suits to have forgery declared, a fraudulent decree set aside, suits for relief on the ground of mistake, suits under Art. 47, by a person bound by an order under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and in certain classes of suits for specific performance of a contract. The period of limitation is proposed to be reduced from 12 years to 3 years, in suits for maintenance by a Hindu under Art. 128, when the rate of maintenance is fixed. The Committee have not considered whether the periods of one year's limitation in pre-emption suits and of six years' for suits for which no period of limitation is prescribed, are too long or not it may also be worth while for the legislators to consider if compulsory deposit by Plaintiffs should be enforced in pre-emption suits and some classes of suits for specific performance.

One of the proposals of the Committee is that the Courts should be empowered by statute to disallow contracts of a champertous nature, and to give relief to the financier by giving him a refund of the money advanced with reasonable profit instead of allowing him a share of the estate, to allow costs to the successful defendant on a special scale and to require the plaintiff, when he is a man without means, to give security for all costs likely to be incurred by the defendant.

Insolvency proceedings have afforded in this country, a very convenient machinery for defrauding creditors, though in England the Bankruptcy Court is a real terror to dishonest debtors. The Committee think that this abuse is not due so much to the defects in the law as to the laxity of the Courts and the absence of proper administrative machinery for enforcing rules which are not only reasonable but are sometimes very hard on the debtors.

The laxity which prevails in Courts in the grant of temporary injunctions, orders for stay of execution proceedings and proceedings in suits and of attachment before judgment is considered by the Committee a fruitful source of delay and of injustice, and an "open invitation to blackmail." Ex parte grant of such prayers is condemned in severe terms, and the prevalence of the lax practice is attributed to "inexperience and weakness on the part of officers."

It is suggested that the existing Codes should be revised periodically. Since the passing of the Indian Contract Act, it has been recognised by eminent jurists as an "abortive attempt at codification." This enactment should in the opinion of the Committee be recast. Unless there be a permanent establishment of Judicial Officers and Administrative Officers in each of the Provincial Councils and the Supreme Council, it will not be possible to maintain the Codes as a live machinery. It is to the interest of the public that minor changes in enactments, when not accompanied by a marked change in policy, should not be made dependant on changes in political leadership and should never be the subject-matter of an electoral programme.

In cases keenly contested, the successful party can only recover a very small portion of the expenses incurred by him. The Committee suggest that measures should be devised to ensure that the costs allowed represent approximately the costs reasonably incurred, and for that purpose they propose a varying scale of pleaders' fees according to the nature of the contest and a system of taxation of costs analogous to what obtains in the Calcutta High Court. The low scale of fees for pleaders in contested suits, especially in suits relating to immoveable property, has been responsible for several abuses, which, both in the interest of the legal profession and of the litigant public, deserve to be speedily remedied. But, much caution is required in moving on this line. In the town of Calcutta, where costs are usually excessive, debtors and port-gagers are sometimes compelled to pay some money in addition to the sum due, to save themselves from the liability for costs of a law suit. It is the consideration of costs of a litigation, which makes tenants pay abwabs or illegal enhancement to landlords, debtors and tenants pay their dues in whole or in part, without written acknowledgment, and throw themselves at the mercy of the other party. Moreover, it is doubtful whether the State will be able to bear the expenses of the machinery for carrying on the task of taxation, honestly and independently. In this connection it may be suggested that some provision of law should be enacted empowering persons to deposit in Court the sum due to a creditor on a bond or on a promissory note. If a creditor be unwilling to accept payment with the view that a large amount of interest on the loan would accumulate, the debtor is put to much difficulty in proving tender.

The absence of a clear rule of procedure for realisation from a defaulting party the fees sanctioned to a Commissioner who has carried out a local investigation, the expenses allowed to a witness and deficit court-fee on a plaint or a petition, has led to conflicting rulings. No suggestion has been made by the Committee for removing these defects.

The main recommendations of the Committee and some of their omissions have been outlined in brief. The Committee evidently displayed conspicuous ability in appreciating the several defects of the present system, in drawing broad and general conclusions from the large mass of statistics supplied to them, in taking a comprehensive view of the different phases of the innumerable questions placed before them and in generally arriving at the proper solution. The value of the work must not be judged from any error or omission but from what has been done. The labour that was thrown upon the members was herculean, the time which they took to finish their work was short, the problems they had to deal with were infinitely varied, complex and sometimes bewildering to a degree, the opinions that they received were conflicting and strongly pronounced on either side and the tenacity with which conservative judicial officers and legal practitioners cling to the existing system must have occasionally been trying if not irritating. Judging from the stand-point of style, the report is admirable. The chapter on Champerty and those dealing with appeals deserve special notice. Every student of law and every lawyer will find the labour devoted to reading those chapters well recompensed.

REPORTS (See Index.)

SIR SURENDRANATH BANERJEA.

Sir Surendranath Banerjea is dead. But the inspiration of his public utterances, the example of his life-work will live for ever to guide the future generations of India in the path of duty to their motherland and fellow beings. Like Rammohan Roy and Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar he was one of the makers of modern India. Each one of this immortal trio drew much enlightenment, culture and inspiration from what is best in modern civilization, blended them with what was best in our own and dedicated their lives to uplift their motherland to the high pedestal that she once occupied in the ancient world. Sir Surendranath's life is so crowded with events that it is impossible to give even a brief resumé of it in our columns. In the recently published reminiscences of his life which has been styled by his publishers "A Nation In Making," he has said very little about himself. It would take volumes to give an account of this nation-builder who made the political emancipation of his people the sole mission of his life. No man in India has worked so hard and worked so long and so selflessly and ceaselessly for the accomplishment of his ideals. On one side of his death-bed lay the plain silver watch which was the constant companion of his life-time and which had helped him to regulate every minute of his day's work including the taking of periodic rest, relaxation, recreation and meals for renovating him for further work all through his long and eventful career. His public career is too well-known to require recapitulation. Like Mazzini his dream from early life was to see India united by a common bond of nationalism. But as a keen student of English history and constitution he preferred the path of reformation to revolution. He honestly believed that if India made an united demand for Self-Government on Dominion lines, England would never be able to refuse the demand. He began his political career by promoting a unity movement all over India and the Indian National Congress furnished him with a congenial platform for popularizing his political ideals. His unity movement had to undergo the severest test during the Partition of Bengal and testified to the triumph of his lead and guidance after prolonged trial and severe ordeals lasting over seven long years. From 1905 and 1912 he brought about such unity in Bengal that the Partition, which was repeatedly declared by the Executive in India and England alike to be a "settled fact," was unsettled. The Reforms of 1919 were largely the fruits of his life-long labours. He used to regard it as a half-way house and he fully believed that the day we could do away with dissensions amongst ourselves we shall be masters in our own house.

He has been much abused for having accepted the Ministry. But he was in honour bound to work out the Reforms, which he had accepted as a provisional measure after prolonged negotiations. As a minister he made the District Boards and Municipalities autonomous bodies in Bengal. He gave the Calcutta Corporation a democratic constitution. He fought hard to do away with communal representation. He had his way in appointing an Indian for the first time as the Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation against stubborn official opposition. In the face of like opposition he gave a number of appointments in the medical department, which was formerly the preserve of the I. M. S. recruited from England, to well-qualified Indian medical men, and that proved to be as unqualified a success as the former. No body can lay charge against him of having jobbed any appointment in his gift. During the Chanderpur coolie exodus, he went out of his way to help the poor sufferers, such relief did not fall within the scope of his department. During the North Bengal flood he trolied all over the worst affected parts in the burning sun in indifferent health, which likewise was no concern of the department in his charge, and went back to Darjeeling with high fever and broncho-pneumonia. After alighting from train in such a state of health, he attended a Select Committee meeting on the Calcutta Municipal Bill and that prostrated him and shattered his health for good. He was all this time the victim of misinformed misrepresentation but he never complained. Work and duty in life was his religion. He used to say, even before his closing days, that he knew of none higher. In his retirement when his health had broken down, it was his strength of mind and buoyant spirit that kept him up. His mind, intellect and memory were as keen as ever. Though his body had failed, his spirit and faith in the future were never wanting. He often used to say that he would like to live another ten years, not to cling to life, but to see the consummation of his life-work; to see India united once again and see her firmly established in the path of Self-Government. He often repeated to the visitors that if we closed in our ranks no earthly power could resist our just demands and he could not comprehend what good would come out of creating bad blood amongst ourselves and between us and England. He was, however, a robust optimist and believed that the present dissension and division amongst us was but a passing phase of our national life and that our people would soon be convinced that united we would rise, and divided we would fall.

The closing chapter of his life when it comes to be written will reveal all that was sublime and beautiful in a man. All through life he has been a people's man. Be it in the Bengalee Office or in the Minister's Chamber in the Secretariat, be it in the days of dire adversity or of later prosperity, the highest or the lowest, the richest or the poorest were equally welcome to him. He would never turn away a man who had a grievance, or a man who had suffered for his country. Leakat Hussain, for instance, who knows neither English nor Bengalee, and has during the last two decades led procession of boys and given expression to his thoughts and ideas in Urdu which the boys only imperfectly understood and who, since the days of partition has been more than half a dozen times imprisoned or bound down for political offences, who has led a life of want and poverty and lived on precarious voluntary gifts, occupied always a soft corner in Surendranath's heart and he has assigned him a place of honour in his reminiscences. Surendranath's attire and habits often brought on him the ridicule of his old bearer who predeceased him and he used to enjoy a hearty laugh over his ideas of propriety and impropriety. He used to crack jokes at him or make fun of him when he wanted some diversion after hours of hard work and he never got reconciled to the loss of this devoted companion of his. With all his fund of fun and frolic he would, however, brook no disturbance from even the best of his friends or nearest or dearest of his relatives when he was at work. But when he wanted relaxation he would be jovial like a child and few men had keener sense of humour and could laugh more heartily. He never bore anybody any malice.

Popularity and fame came to him unsolicited because he devoted all his energy, talent, command over language, power of expression and the rare qualities of head and heart with which God had endowed him in the service of his country and people. But he never hunted for it. Honesty and regard for truth were the guiding principles of his political career. He used to say that he would never knowingly give his people a wrong lead or mislead them and he would always say what he believed to be to their best interest even at the risk of getting unpopular. In his retirement he had freed himself from all passions, desires and vanities of life and had made up his mind to continue to work to the best of his powers for the fulfilment of the ideals of a life-time till his end came and he religiously kept to his determination till his strength failed him. As Ram-mohan Roy was the apostle of the spiritual and social emancipation of modern India so Surendranath was the apostle of India's political rebirth and he set her children on their feet to march on in the path of modern ideals for taking an honoured place amongst the progressive nations of the world. The educated community of to-day may not be all followers of the faith founded by Ram-mohan Roy but who amongst them is there who would deny its potent influence in the enlightenment of our thoughts, ideas and culture. In the same sense Surendranath, more than anybody else, has been a maker of modern India. In the last days of his peaceful life he never desired to have any hysteric or histrionic demonstration over his services to his motherland. He was in perfect peace of mind in the faith that he had done his duty to God and man and that it is through work (karma) alone that a man as also a nation can attain salvation. Work to him was the sole dharma of his life. He used to say that his ashes would float down the Ganges, on the bank of which he lived and find their eternal resting place in the body of his dearly beloved motherland, and his spirit would hereafter find its most congenial home in the mind of his fellow-beings through which alone God reveals himself to mankind. On the evening of the 6th of August, the eve of the inauguration of the Swadeshi movement 20 years ago, his flaming funeral pile lit up the sky above and the brimful bed of the Ganges below adjoining his lovely garden and villa, when the western sky was aglow with the rays of the setting sun. His mortal remains were then washed away by the rising tide and the smouldering embers of the funeral fire were quenched by a welcome shower, and thus Mother Nature amidst a scene of sublime beauty and pathos dropped the curtain of nightfall on a great and glorious career.

REFORMATION OF CRIMINALS.

Bentham and other jurists speak of the prevention of offences as the paramount end of punishment in comparison with which all other ends may be disregarded. Punishment though inflicted for some offence committed is inflicted not for the sake of retribution or compensation but to prevent a repetition of that offence by the offender or some other persons. In ancient times disabling punishments were resorted to and most frequently in order to achieve this object. They partly answered the demand of revenge and retaliation and being sharp, strong and permanent they better suited the rough and ready character of those times. In almost every country a thief had his right hand cut off and a ravisher was castrated. Manu ordained that with whatever limb a man of a low caste should hurt that limb was to be cut off. It is specifically laid down in Manu's Institutes that "he who raises his hand or a stick shall have his hand cut off, he who in anger kicks his foot shall have his foot cut off" and that "with whatever limb a thief in any way commits an offence against men even of that the King shall deprive him in order to prevent a repetition of the crime." As for a low caste man it is even laid down that if "he tries to place himself in the same seat with a man of high caste he shall be branded on his hip and be banished or the king shall cause his buttock to be gashed and that, if out of arrogance he spits on a superior the king shall cause both his lips to be cut off." Increasing humane notions have swept away these physical disabilities but death the most absolute and the permanent disabler of all has survived all attacks and is still a frequent and in some cases a compulsory punishment in most parts of the world.

Restraining punishments were not so frequent in early times as disabling, still an offender was often banished from the state. In modern times transportation has taken the place of banishment. The most ordinary and at the same time most effective restraining punishment however is that of imprisonment which involves a physical restraint for a certain period.

The advocates of the theory of the criminal's reformation respect the human being in the criminal and refuse to use him merely as a means for the preservation of the state and therefore accept punishment for the crime not so much with a view to deter persons from its commission as to preserve the criminal from a relapse. They maintain that this end is more effectively attained by reform than terror, because while violent punishments become familiar and are despised and habitual criminals are more common in countries where the severest penalties are inflicted, mild punishments avoid stirring up hatred and the desire of revenge in the mind of the criminal and may easily tend to his reform.

The theory of reformation alone may not be adequate or correct but whatever the mode or theory of punishment adopted the desirability of the offender's reform should not be lost sight of, and though punishments must be determined with a view to restrain and deter persons from crime, they should be so inflicted as to afford the greatest facilities for the training best calculated to help the offender's reform. The question becomes of paramount importance especially in the case of youthful offenders. The chief objection against sending these offenders to jail is the forced association of criminals in circumstances which materially increase or tend to increase their moral depravity and their knowledge of crime and of the modes of its commission and of the means of eluding punishment. The tendency of all modern systems of legislation is to take the criminal's will into greater consideration and to try not only to prevent the criminal act but also to eradicate or reform the criminal will. The legislature in this country has not been unmindful of this sacred duty of the state and provision has been made in the Reformatory Schools Act for dealing with youthful offenders under the age of fifteen years and in the Code of Criminal Procedure (sec. 562) for dealing with first offenders of a mature age. This latter provision empowers the Court to release certain convicted offenders on probation of good conduct instead of sentencing to imprisonment. The Reformatory Schools Act provides for the detention of a boy of less than fifteen years of age for a period which may extend to seven years in a reformatory school which must provide (a) sufficient means of separating the inmates at night, (b) proper sanitary arrangements, water supply, food, clothing and bedding for the youthful offenders detained therein, (c) the means of giving the youthful offenders industrial training, (d) an infirmary or proper place for the reception of such youthful offenders when sick. Humanitarian efforts cannot find a better field of action than in this direction and the state should always lend its unstinted support to the maintenance and improvement of these institutions. The number of such institutions and the facilities for training to be given therein, should, whenever possible, be increased. To reclaim a youthful offender and to transform him to a useful citizen is one of the noblest services the state can render to itself and to the world at large.

THE REPORT OF THE CIVIL JUSTICE COMMITTEE, 1924-1925.

XI

It is almost certain that with the progress of time the report will gain in weight. But, it is proper to warn people that they should not expect too much from a reform of the judicial system. The chief limitation to the proper working of any system in this country is the ignorance, the poverty and the backwardness of the large mass of the population. They can never appreciate a refined and delicate system, under which they must continue to remain easy victims of touts and pettifoggers. A crude system adapted to their needs cannot satisfy the progressive section of the people. The second limitation is the peculiar position of the judicial officers, which does not enable them to command the same amount of respect as in the advanced countries of the west. So far as the mufassil judiciary are concerned, their subordinate position stands in the way of commanding that amount of respect which on ultimate analysis must be regarded as the principal basis of a successful administration of justice. Though the calibre of Indian officers has much improved of late, the point has not been reached when control over them can safely be withdrawn. Finally, there must be the limitation of inherent weakness in every human device in the field of administration. When the weaknesses of a particular system are discovered, there must be some sections of the people who will try to take advantage of those weaknesses. The Committee have suggested means for removing some of the most glaring weaknesses and it is the duty of every public-spirited citizen to see that these are removed.

The late Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy.

We have to record with deep sorrow the death on Thursday, the 13th August last, of Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy, who had been for years a leader of the Bar on the Appellate Side of the High Court and at the time of his death was the President of the Vakils' Association. Born in the year 1862, after a brilliant academical career, he was enrolled as a Vakil of the Calcutta High Court in 1886. Naturally shy and of an unobtrusive temperament, he did not seek honours or distinctions either in his professional life or outside it. But of so high an order were his abilities and intellectual attainments, that these came to him unsought, whilst his inborn amiability and gentleness of disposition secured for him the love and affection of all with whom he came in contact. His connection with the Calcutta University, in whose growing activities he had participated in one capacity or another, began in 1891 and ended only with his death. He was the first non-official elected Chairman of the Howrah Municipality and for many years was Vice-Chairman of the Howrah District Board. As a member of the Bengal Legislative Council, his services were constantly in requisition in Select Committees and in all transactions which called for clear thinking and the exercise of sound judgment, with both of which he was endowed in a pre-eminent degree. The C. I. E. conferred on him in 1914 bears some testimony to the value of his public services in the eyes of Government. His arguments in Court reflected the clarity of his intellect. A fairer advocate did not exist, and the Officiating Chief Justice Sir Nalini Ranjan Chatterjee echoed the sense of the whole body of his fellow practitioners in the High Court who assembled to do honour to his memory, when he said that he lived up to the highest ideal of professional integrity. As a fitting expression of the loss the profession and the Court suffered by his death, the High Court did not sit on Thursday last till 2-30 p.m., when referring to his death, feeling tributes to his memory were paid before a Full Court by the leaders of the several branches of the profession and by the Officiating Chief Justice.

Speaking with evident emotion, His Lordship said :—

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter, Mr. Advocate-General and Mr. Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, my colleagues and I are deeply grieved at the death of Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy this morning. To all of you who knew Mr. Roy so well, I need not say much, but I desire to take this opportunity of giving expression to our deep sense of the loss caused by his death.

For nearly 40 years Mr. Roy was a well-known figure in this Court, which he joined in 1886 as a Vakil after an academic career of exceptional brilliance. A very able and learned lawyer and a distinguished advocate he won the confidence and esteem of both the Bench and the Bar and lived up to the highest ideal of professional integrity. He commanded a very extensive practice and was one of the leaders of the profession on the Appellate Side. He was always very fair in his advocacy, and it was a pleasure to listen to his arguments at the Bar, which were always clear, concise and cogent. His death is a real loss to the Court and to the profession.

Mr. Roy did not allow his talents to be engrossed solely by the occupation of the law. He was a distinguished scholar in Mathematics and a man of wide culture, and was a prominent figure in the University of Calcutta, of which he was an elected fellow from 1891 onwards. Latterly, he was the Dean of the Faculty of Law. He was the first non-official elected Chairman of the Howrah Municipality and for many years Vice-Chairman of the District

Board of Howrah. In all these capacities he rendered public services of a high order. In 1914, as you know, the Government conferred on him the honour of a Companionship of the Indian Empire.

Mr. Roy was one of the most lovable of men, sincere and simple in habits, and was liked by every one who came into contact with him. I consider his death as a personal loss.

I hope, Dr. Mitter, you will kindly convey the sympathy of my learned brothers and myself to Babu Manmatha Nath Roy and the other members of the bereaved family in the great loss they have suffered."

LONDON NOTES

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

May 21st.—In the Board Room before LORDS ATKINSON, SHAW, and DARLING, in Kanchumarthi V. S. Chandra Rao v. Kanchumarthi Raja, the question for determination was the validity of an adoption. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham for the Respondents were not called upon.

May 21st, 22nd and 25th.—Hira Bibi v. Hari Lall (Patna). This was a suit on a mortgage. The Appellant is a purdanashin woman and contends that she was compelled to execute the deed without knowing its contents.

The main plea is that the mortgage was attested on "the admission of the executors," and that such an attestation is not an attestation within the meaning of sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for the Appellants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

May 25th.—Judgment was delivered in Mir Subhan Ali v. Imami Begum (Bengal). The appeal and cross-appeal were dismissed.

May 25th.—The same Board dismissed on a preliminary objection that the appeal was not competent, Ganesh Narayan v. Manik Lal (Patna).

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. W. Wallach for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and T. Ramsay for the Respondent.

May 26th.—Mt. Nag Kuer v. Sham Lal Sahu. This appeal was heard by LORD SHAW, SIR J. EDGE, LORD BLANESBURGH and MR. AMEER ALI. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Wallach for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Hyam for the Respondent.

June 11th.—The Trinity sittings of the Privy Council commenced on June 11th. The list of business contains twenty-one Indian appeals and fourteen from Canada, Australia and the Crown Colonies. The majority of the Indian cases are from Bengal and Patna, among them being the appeals by the Secretary of State and the Bengal Iron and Steel Co. and the New Birbhum Coal Co. against the Maharaja of Pachete. These appeals raise questions of great interest to the mining community of India and raise the question whether Government parted with mineral rights in the sub-soil at the time of the Permanent Settlement. The appeals were heard ex parte last term, but the Raja was able to petition the Judicial Committee before judgment was delivered and to establish the fact that his failure to be represented at the time of the hearing was due to the fault of his agent. The appeal is therefore to be heard de novo and a Special Board will be constituted for the hearing on July 13th.

June 11th.—LORD PHILLIMORE, LORD CARSON and SIR JOHN EDGE sat to-day on the Board hearing Indian appeals.

In Allah Jawai v. Sat Bharai (Lahore), Mr. Wallach applied for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The suit was of the requisite value but the Indian Courts were of opinion that no substantial question of law was involved, the appeal Court having affirmed the decree of the trial Judge.

Counsel contended that a custom had been pleaded and that the lower Courts had erred in law in pronouncing in its favour in the absence of satisfactory evidence. Leave was refused.

June 11th.—In Ganesh Narayan Sahi v. Pratap Uday Nath Sahi (Patna), the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur claimed to resume Pargana Burway on the failure of heirs male of the grantee. The Maharaja had now bought up the rights of the 1st Appellant and the appeal was dismissed as against him without prejudice to the rights of his son, the 2nd Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. W. Wallach for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Ramsay for the Respondent.

June 11th.—In Hameshwar Singh v. Jugal Kishore (Patna), the question was as to the construction of a contract to cut trees for making sleepers.

The Appellants were owners of sal forests and entered into an agreement with the Respondents that the latter should cut 15,000 sleepers a month or 1,35,000 sleepers in 9 months and pay a royalty on a fixed scale according to the dimensions of the sleepers. At the conclusion of the 2nd month only some 4,000 sleepers had been cut and the Zamindar terminated the contract, contending that he was entitled to do so on failure of the contractors to cut 15,000 in the month. The latter contend that provided the total for the 9 months is up to the minimum it is unnecessary that the monthly total should be 15,000. The Indian Courts have differed.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Hyam for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., K. Brown and Douglas McNair for the Respondents.

June 11th.—Judgment was delivered in Kandapalli Vijayanatuam v. Mandapaka Savana Rao. The appeal was allowed.

The following business has been transacted by the Privy Council during the past week:—

June 12th.—Judgment was delivered by LORD SUMNER in Nowroji R. Wadia v. Govt. of Bombay. The appeal was dismissed.

In the Board Room before LORDS PHILLIMORE and CARSON and SIR JOHN EDGE was heard Bhupendra N. Singh v. Narapat Singh (Bengal), which raises the question whether on the resumption of chowkidari chakran lands the putnidar is entitled to khas possession or whether he is only entitled to such possession on payment of additional rent. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and R. H. Hodge for the Respondent.

June 15th.—Judgment was delivered by LORD DARLING in Jacob v. Wills (Bengal). The appeal was allowed.

June 15th, 16th and 18th.—Before LORD SHAW, LORD CARSON, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI was heard Sourendra Mohun Sinha v. Hari Prasad Sinha.

This was a suit on a mortgage in which the question of jurisdiction as to property in the Santal Parganas being litigated in Bhagalpur, again becomes prominent. The question of jurisdiction was decided by the Board in L. R. 41 I. A. 203 and a similar question arises over the interest payable—it being alleged that the rule of dandapat applies.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Hyam for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Bakes for the Respondent.

New Privy Council Rules.

Through the courtesy of the Registrar of the Privy Council I have received a copy of the new Code of Judicial Committee Rules which will come into force on the 1st January 1926.

The new Rules are mainly a revision of the practice to be followed in England after the arrival of the record, but there are certain alterations which have a bearing on the procedure to be followed by practitioners in India, and attention may be drawn to these.

Rule 4 alters the practice in connection with applying for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

By the practice in force under the Judicial Committee Rules, 1908, the Petitioner had to lodge 5 copies of his petition together with an affidavit in support verifying the statements contained therein, and if a caveat had been lodged by the Opposite Party, notice of the application was sent to him by the Registrar of the Privy Council.

Under the new Rules if no caveat has been lodged, the Petitioner must, in addition to the documents enumerated above, lodge an affidavit of service of notice of the intended application upon all parties who appeared in the Courts below.

The net result is that the Respondent must always have received notice of any intended application for special leave and presumably such notice will as a rule be given to the other parties by the Petitioner's agent in India before the application is made in England.

The new Rule 11 provides that in the event of special leave being granted and the appeal not prosecuted with due diligence the grant may be rescinded and the Respondent awarded costs.

Schedule A contains the rules as to printing and gives detailed instructions as to the method in which the record should be prepared.

"PROCLAIMED OFFENDER" AND "PROCLAIMED PERSON."

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

There seems to be a certain amount of uncertainty with regard to the interpretation of the words "proclaimed offender" which are used in sec. 54 and sec. 59 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

There is a definition of "proclaimed offender" in sec. 45 (2) (ii) of the Code of Criminal Procedure which says that the expression includes any person proclaimed as an offender by any Court or authority established or continued by the Governor-General in Council in any part of India in respect of any act which if committed in British India would be punishable under any of the following sections of the Indian Penal Code, namely, 302, 304, 382, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 402, 435, 436, 449, 450, 457, 458, 459, 460.

Apparently this definition is not exhaustive and the common view is that a person against whom a proclamation has been issued under sec. 87 of the Code of Criminal Procedure would also be included in this category. The decision in I. L. R. 7 Mad. 436 (In the matter of the petition of Pandya Nayak) proceeds upon this view. Sohoni and Sanjiv Rao in their well-known annotations refer to sec. 87 in their notes under secs. 54 and 59 of the Code. The view, however, seems to be in conflict with the scope and wording of sec. 87 et seq. of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Sec. 87, Criminal Procedure Code, provides that proclamation may be published for the appearance of any person against whom a warrant has been issued if such person has absconded or is concealing himself. Hence a proclamation may issue even in summons cases and as against witnesses (Yasin Khan, 5 Nagpur L. R. 125). Sch. V, form 5 prescribes the form of proclamation as against witnesses. Would it be proper to treat a witness against whom a proclamation has been issued under sec. 87, Criminal Procedure Code, on the same footing as a man proclaimed an offender [under sec. 45 (2) (ii)] under such serious sections of the law as secs. 302, 304, 392, 395, I. P. C.?

Then again the form of Sch. V, forms 4 and 5, shows that the proclamation is "made that a certain person is required to appear at a certain place before the Court" and there is nothing to show that such person is proclaimed as an offender.

Finally the person against whom a proclamation has been issued under sec. 87 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is referred to in subsequent sections, e.g., in sec. 88 (1), 88 (6A), 88 (7), as the proclaimed "person" and not as the proclaimed "offender" which suggests a distinction between these two terms.

For these reasons it does not appear probable that a person against whom proclamation has been issued under sec. 87, Criminal Procedure Code, would be regarded as a "proclaimed offender" for the purposes of secs. 54 and 59 of the Code.

The point is not a merely technical one as the right of arrest by a private person under sec. 59, Criminal Procedure Code, will depend on an interpretation of the term. I shall be obliged if any of your readers will kindly quote some recent rulings on the subject.

sec. 54 (1), "thirdly," speaks of "any person who has been proclaimed as an offender either under this Code or by order of the Local Government." What are the respective provisions under the Cr. P. Code and for the Local Government for proclaiming a person as an offender?

I remain,

Yours, etc.,

SUSIL KUMAR MUKHARJI,

Sub Divisional Officer, Noakhali.

REPORTS (See Index.)

Dominion Status of Canada and of the Irish Free State.

We stated in a recent issue that although Dominion Status is incapable of definition yet it is well-understood what it means. We also pointed out that the constitution of the Irish Free State has after all given it the status of a self-governing Dominion within the British Empire. In fact the Anglo-Irish treaty on which the Irish Constitution is based provides that South Ireland is to have the same status as the Dominion of Canada. The late Sir Surendranath Banerjea used to say that the goal of his political ideal for India was the Dominion Status of Canada and thus it will be seen that his ideal and that of the Irish patriots did not materially differ and that he was never a political reactionary that he has been misrepresented to be. It will be remembered that when he was invited to the Imperial Press Conference held in England Mr. Stead at a private interview peremptorily put it to him—that if he was under sentence of death and the executioner's axe was about to fall on his neck and he was told to ask for a boon, what boon would he ask for? Surendranath at once replied that it would be the "Status of the Dominion of Canada" for India. He was well versed in the history and constitution of the British Empire and was as great an admirer of the British Constitution as Dicey and Anson, because of its elasticity and growth and expansion by conventions. The Canadian Constitution is more akin to that of the British Parliament than that of the Commonwealth of Australia which draws its inspiration more from the United States Constitution. It will be seen from what Bonar Law said about Dominion Status that it is one of perfect autonomy and equal partnership which may be dissolved at will and is maintained only by the good-will between the partners. Sir Surendranath knew that those who quibbled about it did so because they did not know what it meant.

The following extract, for which we are indebted to the Law Times, will show how Canada at the Coronation of the late Queen Victoria, then on the point of rising in rebellion, abstained from taking any part in the Divine Services held in celebration of it in the Canadian Churches. She had then a representative form of Government but the executive, as now in India, were irresponsible. But since the grant of responsible Government and at the present moment, how she appreciates her status of an honourable partner in the British Empire will be evident from the report of the 58th Dominion Day Dinner. Recently we quoted the opinion of Mr. Lloyd George as regards the Dominion Status and in the extract below is cited the opinion of another Prime Minister of England, Mr. Bonar Law, who was Canadian by birth, in the same connection. It also gives the clauses of the Anglo-Irish treaty which provides that the constitutional status of the Irish Free State will be the same as the status of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Larkin, the High Commissioner for Canada, presided at the Dominion Day Dinner to celebrate the fifty-eighth anniversary of the Canadian Federation, established under the provisions of the Imperial Act known as the British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict.). Mr. Howard Ferguson, Prime Minister of Ontario, responding to the toast "The Dominion of Canada," verified, albeit unconsciously, the judgment of Mr. Payne, in his "Colonies and Dependencies," writing in the early eighties of last century, that the concession to Canada of responsible government is "the emancipation of the Empire and the principal event in our modern Colonial history." "I say," said Mr. Howard Ferguson, "speaking with a full sense of my responsibility that every Canadian and every donor of Canadian money would be spent in resisting separation from the British Empire. Canada has no other purposes or object." In 1857, the year of the accession to the throne of Queen Victoria, Lower Canada was in insurrection and Upper Canada was preparing to rise. When Te Deums were sung in Canadian churches to celebrate the coming to the Throne of Queen Victoria the congregations left their seats and walked out. Lord Durham, who had been sent out as Governor had been recalled in disgrace in consequence of his famous report, in which he laid it down that the true policy for Canada was to allow the Canadians who had representative government, but not responsible government "to execute as well as to make the law"—in other words, to establish responsible government by the institution of a Cabinet responsible to assemblies elected by the people and through these assemblies to the people at large. The concession to Canada by the Act (3 & 4 Vict., c. 35) of a constitution similar in principle, to quote the words of the statute, "to that of the United Kingdom, whereby the executive council was made responsible to the Legislature" in the same way as the British Cabinet is responsible to Parliament, transformed the revolted Canadians into loyal subjects of the British Empire, and supplied Great Britain with the very best method for the retention of the other colonies—namely the concession to them of responsible government and the establishment of a union with the Mother Country, based not on force but on the community of interests of blood and language and the sympathy and affection which spring from such community. Mr. Bonar Law, who was himself a Canadian by birth, speaking in the House of Commons on the 30th March 1920, described the nature of the union between Great Britain and the Dominions, to whose strength and intensity the Premier of Ontario has testified. "What," said Mr. Bonar Law, "is the essence of Dominion Home Rule? The essence of it is that they have control over their own destinies, of their fighting forces, and of the amounts which they will contribute to the general security of the Empire. All these things are vital to Home Rule. . . . There is not a man in the House who would not admit that the connection of the Dominions with the Empire depends upon themselves. If the self-governing Dominions—Australia, Canada—chose to-morrow to say: 'We will no longer make a part of the British Empire,' we would not try to force them. Dominion Home Rule means the right to decide for themselves." The British North America Act, 1867, may be regarded as the complement of the Act establishing self-government in Canada. It united the Canadian colonies with New Brunswick and Nova Scotia into one colony under the name of the Dominion of Canada, Upper Canada becoming the province of Ontario, and Lower Canada the province of Quebec. It is of interest to the student of constitutional history and development, and to persons learned in the law who take a natural pride in the achievements of members of the legal profession to record that the statesman principally concerned on the Canadian side with the agreement for a federal union was the Hon. Edward Blake, Q.C., who was a leader of great eminence at the Canadian bar, but who occupied the very highest judicial position. He became eventually Prime Minister of Ontario.

The establishment of responsible government in Canada may well be regarded, not only as "the principal event in our modern colonial history," but as the "principal event in the establishment of the relations between Great Britain and Ireland under the Irish Free State Constitution. Ireland was not a colony, nor a dependency, but theoretically an independent kingdom before the Union, whose Crown was adherent to the Crown of Great Britain in the articles of agreement for a treaty between Great Britain and Ireland, set forth in the Second Schedule of the Constitution of the Irish Free State Act, 1922, whose second section enacts that the Constitution of the Irish Free State "shall be construed with reference to these articles, the example of the Canadian Constitution is declared to be followed in the working of the Irish Constitution. This, the first article of the Anglo-Irish Treaty declares that Ireland "shall have the same constitutional status in the Community of Nations known as the British Empire as the Dominion of Canada . . . with a Parliament having powers to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Ireland and an Executive responsible to that Parliament." The second article declares that "the position of the Irish Free State [subject to provisions therein after set forth] in relation to the Imperial Parliament and Government and otherwise shall be that of the Dominion of Canada, and the law, practice and constitutional usage governing the relationship of the Crown or the representative of the Crown and of the Imperial Parliament to the Dominion of Canada shall govern their relationship to the Irish Free State." The third article declares "The representative of Crown in Ireland shall be appointed in like manner as the Governor-General of Canada, and in accordance with the practice observed in the making of such appointments." The governing institutions and the constitutional law and practice of the Dominion of Canada are powerful factors in the growth of the Constitution of the British Empire, which is progressing in unabated strength and vigour from day to day before our eyes.

Parliamentary opposition and obstruction.

The following extract which we also take from our legal contemporary will be found interesting as showing the functions of the opposition party in Parliament with regard to the carrying on of the internal administration and the foreign affairs of State. The Opposition is not without its influence on the party in power or the Government of the day. They do not oppose for the sake of opposition which would amount to obstruction but do so only on crucial questions of policy or in matters of moment regarding which they feel or believe that the policy or measure would be prejudicial to the best interests of the people. It is this spirit of discipline and self-control and the good sense of the members that has secured the British Parliament the high esteem in which it is held in the world.

A lay contemporary, dealing with the system of government by party in this country, quotes the acknowledged phrase, "It is the duty of the Opposition to oppose." The very existence of an efficient party system is in absolute refutation of that principle in its entirety. Parliamentary opposition, conducted on lines in accordance with the genius of the British people and of the British Constitution, is subject to many limitations. Professor Redlich, an acute observer of the working of the British Constitution and of Parliamentary practice, in a work to which the late Sir Courtenay Ilbert has written the introduction, writes: "On all the more important matters which have to be brought forward by the Government as the executive organ of the majority, it has become customary to arrive at some understanding between the two great parties and their leaders which often forms a basis of joint political action. This practice dates back to the time when the system of Cabinet Government was perfected, and when the existence of two great compact parties became a standing and dominant element in English politics, i.e., to about the beginning of the nineteenth century. On certain subjects of great national importance, such as foreign affairs, especially when it is to the interest of the State that the decision of Parliament should appear to be the unanimous decision of the nation, it is a recognised convention that the consent of the Opposition to the proposals of the Government should be obtained by unofficial communications or, at all events, that a serious endeavour should be made to obtain such consent. [These words, written in 1908, have been abundantly verified by the attitude of the Opposition during the Great War.] Another custom belonging to the same class of Parliamentary usages is that of arriving, or trying to arrive, at some kind of compact as to the speed at which the chief measures of a session shall be taken, and as to the distribution over the session of the work that has to be got through. . . . It is always worth while for the Cabinet to make a strong effort to arrive at some understanding with the Opposition as to any large project of legislation. It is one of the ordinary incidents of Parliamentary business for an official declaration to be made by the leader of the Opposition as to the attitude of his party towards the great legislative proposals before the House. Professor Redlich directs attention to the profound differences between the political parties of England and those of Continental States. "There can," he writes, "be no better illustration of this than the way in which the elaborate parallelism in the Parliamentary arrangements of the two great parties in the House of Commons is applied to bring about a permanent organisation for the maintenance of a constant understanding between Majority and Opposition, and even for common work in the interests of the State. This remarkable phenomenon casts a vivid light upon the inmost character of English parties, and will not in the least harmonise with the lurid pictures which most German constitutional teachers have been accustomed to paint of 'party rule' and of the dangers of unbridled 'party tyranny.' The presence of a party or parties in the House of Commons not in unison with the official Opposition, does not alter the essential character of Cabinet Government, which pre-supposes two parties only for the all intents and purposes representing cardinal principles of Government authority on the one side, popular rights and privileges on the other."

Let us hope that attempts at the organisation of "party rule" in this country will not degenerate into "party tyranny."

LONDON NOTES

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

June 29th.—After a week's interval Indian appeals are once more being heard by the Judicial Committee.

Judgment was delivered in Homeswar Singh v. Jugal Kishore, the appeal being allowed and the cross-appeal dismissed.

A Board composed of VISCOUNT FINLAY, LORD CARSON and LORD BLANESBURGH heard an appeal from Hyderabad, Deccan, Bansilal Abirchand v. Ghulam Mahbub Khan. This was a suit for principal and interest due on three bonds and the main question was one of jurisdiction. The suit was brought in the Court of the Civil Judge at Secunderabad to recover money lent to the grandfather of the 1st Respondent. The borrowers were residents in Hyderabad, Deccan, but it was claimed that the loans were made and were repayable in Secunderabad. The original loan was made in 1891 and the suit, if brought in the Hyderabad Courts, would have been barred by limitation. Exemption, however, was claimed on the ground of foreign residence under sec.

13 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908. The decree under appeal dismissed the suit for want of jurisdiction. Judgment was reserved. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

Before the same Board the following applications were made:—

(1) Khas Hooi Lerug v. Khas Hean Kwee (Straits Settlements). Mr. Whinney applied for re-instatement of this appeal and obtained leave on condition of paying costs and setting down the appeal for trial in the Michaelmas term. Gorin Simmonds appeared for the Respondent.

(2) Sarju Ram v. Oudh Behari Panda (Allahabad). Mr. Wallach applied for special leave to appeal from a judgment of the High Court. There were concurrent findings against him but the Appellant alleged a substantial question of law. Leave was refused.

(3) Dhanpat Rai v. Kahan Singh (Lahore). Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Douglas McNair applied for special leave to appeal. The decree of the Appellate Court had confirmed the decree of the trial Court in dismissing the Appellant's claim but the legal findings of the two Courts differed. Leave was granted.

June 30th.—Ma Chit Su v. The National Bank of India. This was an appeal from the High Court at Rangoon and was heard by a Board composed of VISCOUNT FINLAY, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and MR. JUSTICE DUFF. The suit was brought by the Respondent Bank for specific performance of a contract for the sale of certain buildings abutting on Phayre St. and 37th St., Rangoon. The Appellant contested the suit on the ground that the proposed vendor, who was the administrator of her husband's estate, was acting beyond the scope of his authority in contracting to sell. Judgment was reserved.

Hon. Geoffrey Lawrence, K. C. and Mr. E. F. W. Besley for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

July 2nd.—The same Board are now hearing an appeal from Lahore, Ahmad Khan v. Mt. Channi Bibi, in which questions are being litigated regarding rights to property among Khattar agriculturists of the Attock District. The Plaintiff alleges that the villages in dispute are "acquired" and not "ancestral" property and that she is entitled to them under a custom whereby a sister inherits the property of her childless brother. Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Majid for the Respondent.

July 2nd.—Appeals from Canada are now being heard in the Council Chamber and Indian appeals in the Board Room.

July 2nd and 6th.—Ahmad Khan v. Channi Bibi (Lahore) was heard by VISCOUNT FINLAY, SIR JOHN EDGE, MR. AMEER ALI and MR. JUSTICE DUFF. The Appellants were represented by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes, the Respondent by Mr. A. Majid.

The suit was instituted by the Respondent to obtain possession of property in the Attock District which had belonged to her father. The main question for decision is as to whether the Plaintiff has established a custom entitling her to succeed to the property as the sister of the last male owner. Judgment was reserved.

July 6th.—Judgment was delivered by LORD SUMNER in Mt. Farid-un-nisa v. Mukhtar Ahmad (Oudh). The appeal was allowed.

In Khuchaldas Goculdas v. Chunilal (Bombay), Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. L. M. Parikh applied for special leave to appeal from a decision of the Bombay High Court. Counsel contended that there were two main questions for determination—

(1) the construction of a document on which both lower Courts were agreed, and
(2) limitation, on which the lower Courts had differed, and in the circumstances there was an appeal to the Board as of right. Leave was granted.

The Legality and Effect of Conditional Pardon to Accomplices outside the Scope of sec. 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure

REPORTS (See Index)

Preliminary hearing in criminal appeals.

Some very wholesome directions have been given by the Madras High Court in the case of Turka Hussain Saheb, 48 Mad. 585, regarding the summary dismissal of criminal appeals. In Ram Tahal Dosul v. King-Emperor, 36 Cal. 385, Holmwood and Ryves, J.J., observed: "It is in accordance with the experience of both of us in two different provinces as regards the practice in the Mofussil that appeals which are supported by a pleader are in practice admitted without any hearing except on the question of bail; the only cases which are usually dealt with under sec. 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code being jail appeals." This seems no longer to be the practice for it is a matter of common knowledge that in many districts at least, if not all, the petition of appeal has to be supported as soon as it is presented and this is the preliminary hearing under sec. 421 of the Code. How in matters like this a practice grows up which is against the rule laid down by the highest Court it is difficult to say, but it is surely due to the negligent manner in which work is done in the Mofussil Courts. In the case noticed above reported in 36 Calcutta the learned Judges distinctly laid down that a pleader for an Appellant should not be called upon immediately on the filing of an appeal to support it but should be afforded a reasonable opportunity of being heard. If the appeal is not admitted at once and the Court desires to hear the Appellant before admitting it, he should be given at least a week's notice. In the Madras case under notice the pleader who filed the appeal on being immediately called upon to argue it asked for two days' time to prepare his arguments but the request was not granted and the appeal was dismissed. The Sessions Judge on being moved in the matter called for an explanation from the lower Appellate Court, in this case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who remarked to the following effect—"After preparing the appeal petition if a vakil says he is not ready with the case I should consider his conduct quite unprofessional." Of course the curious notions entertained by the learned Magistrate about unprofessional conduct have not found favour with the High Court and Mr. Justice Ramasami held in agreement with the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case referred to above that a criminal appeal should not be heard at the time of presenting the papers even for the purpose of dismissal under sec. 421, Cr. P. C. There must be a special posting of the appeal after a reasonable time for the purpose of hearing under sec. 421, Cr. P. C. An appeal raising questions of fact ought not to be disposed of under sec. 421 without the original records being called for from the lower Court.

THE LEGALITY AND EFFECT OF CONDITIONAL PARDON TO AC- COMPLICES OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF SEC. 337 OF THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

We understand that Mr. Amarnath Dutt, M.L.A., has given notice for leave to introduce in the Legislative Assembly a Bill to amend sec. 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by insertion of a clause to the effect that a conditional pardon shall not be tendered to an accomplice in any case, in any manner not provided for in that section. In the statement of objects and reasons the necessity for amendment is said to have arisen from the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Har Prasad Bhargava, reported in I. L. R. 45 All. 226. We think that the matter of the proposed legislation is one of considerable importance and public attention was drawn to it by a petition signed by several members of the Agra Bar to the Statute Revision Committee of the Government of India, and to both Houses of the Central Legislature, a copy of which appeared in the "Hindustan Times" of the 21st March last. The Allahabad High Court has held in this case that an executive authority like a Local Government has inherent power to grant conditional pardon to accomplices in cases outside the scope of sec. 337 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to obtain and tender their evidence against others actually prosecuted. This view of the Allahabad High Court has been recently followed by the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court in the case of A. W. Chandekar v. Emperor, decided on 6th July 1925 and reported in All-India Reporter, 1925, Nagpur 313. In its issue of the 15th August 1925, the Amrita Bazar Patrika has drawn public attention to this matter.

Both these cases were against public servants, one against a Subordinate Judge and the other against a Tahsildar, under sec. 161, Indian Penal Code, and arose in the Central Provinces in which the Local Government had proclaimed conditional pardon to accomplices, namely, the bribers and their abettors. The guarantee was held out that the Government would not institute any criminal proceedings against the bribers and abettors who gave evidence against the persons notified to be proceeded against. We also understand that the Local Government recently gave a similar amnesty to certain defence witnesses in the case of Jagpat Rao v. Satidas and others now pending in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Betul District in order to allow them to give evidence of having bribed the complainant who is prosecuting the accused in that case for defamation. In the Agra Bar petition several considerations have been raised to show that the view of the Allahabad High Court is not sound and is fraught with difficult and dangerous consequences.

Looking first to the legality of a conditional pardon to accomplices outside the scope of sec. 337 of the Code, we find that the view of the Allahabad High Court is directly in opposition to that of the Calcutta High Court in Banusing v. Emperor (33 Cal. 1353) and of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court in Govinda v. Emperor (16 Nagpur Law Reports 9). In the Calcutta case the High Court has held that a Local Government in India has no power to tender conditional pardon to an accomplice for the purpose of his being examined as a competent witness against others accused with him. That Court after referring to the English and the Indian law on the subject came to this conclusion and Mitra, Additional Judicial Commissioner, in deciding the Nagpur case followed this view. The Allahabad High Court, and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court while deciding Chandekar's case recently, cited no authority in support of their view and we confess it is difficult to find any to support it. Regarding the view in Banusing's case the Allahabad High Court simply said: "In a case to which we referred above, that of Banusing v. Emperor, the learned Judges held that a Local Government in India has no power to tender a conditional pardon to an accomplice for the purpose of his being examined as a competent witness against others accused with him. If this pronouncement only means that the Legislature in India has provided no method outside the scope of sec. 337 or 494 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by which a Local Government can provide an accomplice with a judicial order which he can subsequently plead in bar of his own prosecution, should such prosecution be instituted, it is undoubtedly correct." But it seems clear from the judgment in Banusing's case that the above is not the meaning of the Calcutta High Court's ruling. On the other hand, the question of the competency of the Local Government to tender conditional pardon in a case outside the pale of sec. 337 was actually and directly before the Court and was decided by it. In support of their view the Allahabad High Court argued, "It seems to us obvious at the same time that a discretion to refrain from instituting a prosecution, in any particular case, is inherent in any authority to which the law has entrusted the power to institute the prosecution. Nor can any law prevent a person or body of persons, exercising such authority from determining beforehand how that discretion shall be exercised upon the happening of a certain contingent event. If such determination is communicated beforehand to any person or body of persons to whom it may concern we can find no provision in the Indian Statute law which lays down that the competency of such person or persons to testify as witnesses in a Criminal Court about any matter in such communication is thereby affected." Now this argument does not seem faultless, for to refrain from instituting a prosecution against a person unconditionally is one thing and to tender him a conditional pardon extrajudicially in order to induce him to give evidence against another person is an entirely different thing, because apart from the one being legal and the other illegal the effect of such procedure on the mind of the accomplice is entirely different in the two cases.

It is obvious that the power of instituting a prosecution does not always rest with a Local Government, for, barring a few cases wherein the previous sanction of the Local Government is required to institute prosecution, any private individual, even a party not actually aggrieved but aware of the facts of the case, can institute a prosecution against an offender. A Local Government is a constituted body and consequently it can have only such powers as are given to it by its constitution or expressly by any other law. In R. v. Hanumanth (1 Bom. 611), Melvil, J., seems to have been of opinion that the tender of pardon in this country must be in conformity with the Code of Criminal Procedure which and which alone should regulate trials in criminal cases. In view of this and other considerations which follow, the tender of pardon to an accomplice by a Local Government or any executive authority outside the scope of sec. 337 appears to be illegal.

We next consider the effects of such conditional pardons by executive authority on the admissibility, and value of accomplices' evidence in criminal trials which must be governed by the mandatory provisions of sec. 5 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The first point deserving consideration is why the Code of Criminal Procedure has made no provision for the grant of conditional pardon in cases outside the scope of sec. 337. To our mind the reason is plain and it is this. Law disfavours the evidence of accomplices on grounds of public policy and natural justice. Hence it is that the scope of the section is limited to particular offences and the procedure is hedged with safe-guards and limitations. It is significant that the recent amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure, while extending the scope of sec. 337, did not bring sec. 161 of the Indian Penal Code under its operation. Whenever the Legislature considered it necessary to extend the scope of that section it had to enact special or local laws. Sec. 7 of the Punjab Frontier Crimes Regulation (No. 3 of 1901) and sec. 8 of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1925 are illustrations in point. And further secs. 163 and 343 of the Code expressly prohibit any person in authority or Court from obtaining any disclosure from an accomplice or accused person by offering any inducement, promise or threat. Again the statement of an accomplice in pursuance of a conditional pardon not authorised by sec. 337 becomes, by reason of sec. 24 of the Evidence Act, inadmissible and irrelevant against him in his own prosecution for the offence in which he is an accomplice. In the words of Lord Campbell, C. J., in R. v. Scott, D. and B. 47, the reason is "because under such circumstances the party may have been influenced to say what is not true and the supposed confession cannot safely be acted upon." "It is not because law is afraid of having the truth elicited that these confessions are excluded, but because the law is jealous of not having the truth," R. v. Mansfield, 14 Cox C. C. 639. Confession not relevant against the maker is not relevant against a co-accused person. In two cases reported in 1 L. R. 45 All. 300 and 633, the statements of accomplices were obtained on the basis of illegal pardons and they were held irrelevant not only against the persons making them but were not allowed to be used against other co-accused also. In 2 All. 260 and 1 Lahore 102, the evidence of accomplices obtained on illegal pardons was rejected as altogether inadmissible. If then instead of the statement of the accomplice obtained by offer of an illegal pardon being used against him as accused person it is sought to be used by putting the accomplice into witness box against the other accused, it should have less relevancy and weight, for in this latter case the accomplice has not even the fear of the statement being used against him and feels fortified by the pardon.

Even assuming that the evidence of an accomplice obtained on the basis of a conditional pardon outside the scope of sec. 337 is technically admissible under the Evidence Act, it can hardly be denied that it may cause great hardship and perhaps grave injustice. The position has been well brought out in the judgment of Mitra, J., in Govinda v. Emperor (16 Nagpur Law Reports 9). There Mitra, J., has clearly shown that to tender conditional pardon to accomplices in cases and in manner not authorised by sec. 337 is practically a direction to the Police Officer or the Magistrate holding the investigation or enquiry not to do their duty under secs. 170 and 204 of the Code, and both these sections are obligatory and not directory. Under the former section it is the clear duty of the investigating Police Officer to move the Court to take proceeding against all the persons whom the investigation shows to be guilty and under sec. 204 the Magistrate taking cognisance of the offence is bound to issue process against all the accused when there is sufficient ground for proceeding. Under sec. 239 of the Code, the Magistrate has no doubt a discretion to proceed jointly or separately against all the accused but not to proceed at all against some is not within the competency of the Magistrate. The power to convert an accomplice or accused into a competent witness legally rests with the Magistrate or Court under sec. 494 or 337 of the Code and it is an evasion of law not to adopt any of these courses and tender him as a witness under an unauthorised promise of pardon by pledging public faith not to prosecute him. The evidence of such accomplice is thus obtained in disregard of statute law, and herein lies the illegality as also in not proceeding against such accomplice at all. The consequences of these illegalities were not considered by the Allahabad High Court and the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court in their judgments referred to above. It is unfortunate that neither Court referred to the view laid down in the case of Govinda v. Emperor (15 Nagpur Law Reports 9) nor gave a decision on such an important point of law.

Obviously sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be invoked to cure an illegality of the nature indicated above. As pointed out in an article at page lxxiv of 29 Calcutta Weekly Notes, "The only defects that can be condoned under the section are those which are mentioned in the section and those only. It is not a general 'curing' section governing all the provisions regarding procedure but in certain specified cases it can be invoked to cure certain defects on the ground that no prejudice has been caused or in the words of the section no failure of justice has been occasioned. When it is pleaded that a certain deviation from the established procedure comes within the scope of sec. 537 the points for determination are—(a) Is it one of the defects mentioned in the section? (b) Has it in the circumstances of the particular case occasioned a failure of justice? The decision of the Court must be either (a) it is or it is not an irregularity contemplated by the section and (b) it has or it has not in the circumstances of the particular case occasioned a failure of justice." To hold otherwise will amount to saying that that section abolishes the rest of the Code by making the other sections non-obligatory. It is to be regretted that the High Court in 45 All. 226 contented itself by deciding "whatever effect the circumstances under which the evidence of the accomplice witnesses was given in that case might have been upon its credibility there could be no objection to its admissibility," and did not consider the consequences following from the evidence of those witnesses being obtained in pursuance of an unauthorised conditional tender of pardon as an illegality vitiating the trial and not cured by sec. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Nagpur Court also left the matter there.

As a matter of public policy also the evidence of a witness to whom conditional pardon has been given outside the scope of sec. 337 should carry no weight whatsoever, for it is obvious that the case of such an illegally pardoned approver is quite different from that of one legally pardoned under sec. 337 or 494 because the former would naturally say as much as possible in favour of the prosecution, as he thinks his safety depends upon the executive authority's opinion and not upon any judicial finding and his statement cannot also be used against him in his prosecution for the same offence by reason of sec. 24 of the Evidence Act. Again—as pointed out by Jardine, J., in 14 Bom. 331, the evidence of an accomplice obtained on the strength of conditional pardon granted by the executive authority is likely to be a source of considerable danger to the purity of justice for it can lead to false evidence being easily got up.

We think it is desirable that a test case should be taken up to the Privy Council in order to obtain the pronouncement of the highest tribunal on the scope of sec. 337, Criminal Procedure Code. In the meantime we agree that the bill of Mr. Dutt is based on sound principles and hope that the Legislature will soon see their way to lay down the law on the subject expressly and correctly.

Capital sentence cases—Duty of Crown to provide Counsel for defence when necessary.

A glance at the list of undefended cases in the High Court shows that even many capital sentence cases have to be decided by the Hon'ble Judges without the assistance of Counsel on both sides. It is a notorious fact that in these cases convictions are had very often on circumstantial evidence, for direct evidence is seldom available in these cases. The heinousness of the offence and the gravity of the punishment involved inspire the perpetrators with a desperate effort to conceal all traces of the occurrence; on the other hand, the detective ability of the police is put to the severest test. The conjoint effect of all these is that the guilt must be fastened on some one who must be punished.

To refer to a few notable instances the case of Iswar Napit of Howrah is like a romance. Iswar had a grown up daughter who fell into evil ways and she disappeared from her father's house. The enemies of Iswar gave out that he had murdered his daughter. The dead body was found and identified and Iswar was placed on his trial and in due course convicted and sentenced to death. On the appointed day when Iswar was to pay the extreme penalty of law, the executioner was about to put the noose round his neck when a woman suddenly appeared on the scene and frantically cried out, "Save him I am alive." It was Iswar's daughter who in spite of all her faults had so much of the human being left in her that she could not bear the idea of her father losing his life for no fault of his but indirectly on account of her own misdeeds.

In the case of Madhab Chowkidar the victim was a little girl and the accused her father. Madhab was a village chowkidar who on coming home after doing his duty at night went to bed late at night, his only and beloved child a daughter of seven or eight sleeping by his side. Sometime after, the girl woke up the father as she wanted to go out to answer a call of nature. The place was infested with wild boars and hence the girl wanted her father to accompany her. The poor fellow was tired—sleep had not had sufficient time to refresh him and he asked the girl to go out and fear nothing. While outside she raised an alarm and the father to scare away the wild animal threw a split bamboo with one end sharpened like a spear which struck the girl who expired with a groan. Nothing seemed to be more welcome to Madhab than his own death. His wife who had for long been on the look out for an opportunity to get rid of him as he had always stood as an obstacle in the way of her felicitous relations with her paramour proclaimed to the neighbours that the girl had been murdered by Madhab in a fit of anger. Madhab was tried, convicted and sentenced to death. His wife ran home and made offerings to the local deity to inaugurate the happy event. Madhab was ultimately saved by the gratuitous services of the late Mr. Mon Mohan Ghosh rendered in the cause of justice.

The Balladhan murder case, in which a tea planter of the name of Mr. Cockburn was murdered in the dead of night while sleeping in his bungalow with his mistress, a cooly woman named Sadi, was also peculiar for many reasons. For this murder two sets of accused persons were on two different trials which took place at an interval of thirteen years, convicted and sentenced to suffer the extreme penalty of the law. It is needless to say that on each occasion the accused were acquitted by the High Court. In the first Balladhan trial, Mr. J. T. Woodroffe who argued the appeal of the condemned men made a memorable speech in the course of which he said: "The ermine of justice has been frequently sullied in this country by the misconduct of the police but never has the course of—I would not say justice but of proceedings conducted in the name of justice—disclosed a more contemptuous disregard of law or an action more calculated to tarnish the name of British justice than the one which has just come under observation."

Coming to more recent times the Comilla shooting case created perhaps the greatest sensation at the time and the trial in this case was described by a local contemporary as "wonderland justice." About the same time came another case from the same district in which the deceased was done to death with a dao and the cervical column was severed yet he distinctly and audibly named his assailant. This trial also called for the stroppest comments in the press especially from the then editor of the Capital whose sledge-hammer criticism was very poignant.

Another sensational case came up to the High Court from the District of Maldah, the case of Emperor v. Birjis Kader. A school boy was found on his way home from school in the company of Birjis Kader. He never reached home and was missed for ever. He was last seen alive with Birjis Kader who was convicted as the murderer. In the High Court this case did not require much effort on the part of the learned Counsel who defended the accused. After the judgment was placed the Crown was called upon to reply and the Hon'ble Judges at once sent down an order to release the accused on his personal recognizance pending the delivery of a written judgment.

A case from Birbhum was perhaps the most unique. A diabolical murder took place in a respectable Brahmin family consisting of the father, two sons and the wife of the elder son who was away from home at the time. The victim was the youngest son, a boy of eight, who was hacked to pieces with an axe. The head of the family handed over his daughter-in-law to the police as the criminal. She was marched off to the Sudder, a distance of sixteen miles and after having walked the whole way when she reached the house of the Police Inspector, she begged of the people there to give her a glass of water to drink. There she spent the night and when morning came with it came a confession full of details as to how the monstrous act had actually been done. The chain of evidence was complete, she was found guilty but the Sessions Judge in consideration of her age and sex sentenced her to transportation for life.

The record was so very complete that it was indeed a very difficult case for Counsel for the defence. Suspicion was however roused and the Hon'ble Judges called for the special diary of the police—the confidential diary as it is called and this document disclosed startling facts which left no room for doubt as to the innocence of the girl. Their Lordships in a very well considered judgment acquitted her whom they described as the housewife, the cook and the housemaid all in one who became the victim of a foul conspiracy.

A story is current in legal circles that many years ago a large sum of money came into the local kutchery of a rich zemindar as remittance of rent collected in various centres and the same night the zemindar's naib was murdered and the money looted. A reward was proclaimed for the arrest of the offender and he was arrested, placed on his trial and convicted by the Sessions Judge. When the matter came in appeal to the High Court Sir Charles Paul, then Mr. Paul, the Advocate-General, supported the conviction on behalf of the Crown. The appeal was dismissed, the condemned man paid the penalty for the crime he had committed by his own life and peace and order were established in the locality and the zemindar's men went on with their ordinary duties as usual without any further trouble. Years rolled away, the facts of this sometime sensational case were all drowned in oblivion. Mr. Paul was one morning strolling in his garden giving instructions to his servants when a middle-aged man with an old fashioned umbrella in his hand entered the gateway and saluted the sahib. "Who are you and what do you want?" were naturally the questions put to him and these elicited the following answer: "Sir, I am the murdered naib of that zemindar from whose kutchery a large amount of money was stolen and whose murderer was at your instance convicted and hanged." The man was bidden to sit down and he related the whole story, how the money actually came to the kutchery, how a dacoity took place at night and the money was looted, how the naib apprehending that his master incensed at the loss of so much money would naturally put him into trouble fled before the day dawned, how for years he kept himself in concealment from which he came out after the death of the old zemindar, how the idea haunted him that an innocent man had been killed and even the great lawyer had been duped into believing him to be really guilty. The brain of the veteran lawyer began to reel, he asked the man to go, sank into his sofa and pondered over what had taken place.

All these go to show that it is very difficult to come to a definite conclusion in these cases which as stated above are mostly decided on circumstantial evidence. Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterji when presiding over the Criminal Bench used to request lawyers to take up these undefended cases, but this went on for some time only. The late Sir Syed Shamsul Huda when in charge of the judicial portfolio in the Governor's Executive Council favoured the idea of the Crown providing for Counsel in these cases but he used to say that nothing substantial could be done unless the High Court took the initiative in the matter. We think the Hon'ble Judges should ask the Government to make the necessary provision.

JURISDICTION OF CIVIL COURT TO PULL DOWN HUTS WHEN GIVING DELIVERY OF POSSESSION.

In Mofussil Courts very often a certificated purchaser prays for taking delivery of possession by removing huts standing on the land and the reported cases of the High Courts do not throw much light on the point. Some Courts allow the prayer of the decree-holder provided a notice is duly served upon the judgment-debtor allowing him opportunity for removing the structures but it can be supported neither by any authority nor can it be said that it is done in strict compliance with any provision of the Civil Procedure Code. The result has been confusion when Courts have had to deal with matters of this description.

Now the question of the removal of huts may arise in three specific cases:—

- (1) Under a rent decree.
- (2) Under a money decree.
- (3) Under a mortgage decree.

In a case where the huts are specifically purchased there arises no difficulty in answering the question but the question becomes complicated where the decree, sale-certificate and the writ of delivery of possession are silent on the point and a writ is duly issued under Or. 21, r. 95.

Let us examine the different aspects of the case.

There are only two distinct and separate provisions in the Civil Procedure Code for taking khas possession. Or. 21, r. 35 refers to cases where a suit is brought for possession of immoveable property and a decree is passed in the suit for the delivery of the property to the decree-holder, while r. 95 of the same order refers to cases where immoveable property belonging to judgment-debtor is sold in execution of the decree against him and possession is sought by the auction-purchaser. Save and except the difference that has been noted above the two rules are similar in scope. R. 35 consists of three distinct, separate and independent clauses and each of these clauses deals with different subject-matters. Cl. 3 speaks of delivery of possession when it is directed against buildings and enclosures. Cl. 1 is exactly parallel to r. 95 and the only distinguishing feature that is apparent is that in the latter portion of the former rule, the words "if necessary" have been inserted as against "if need be" in r. 95. The wordings of cl. 1 of r. 35 does not and cannot cover circumstances provided for in cl. 3. There is only one section in the Code for taking delivery of possession of houses, and this is contained in cl. 3 of r. 35. If the provisions of cl. 3 to r. 35 is not contemplated to cover a case coming within cl. 1, we cannot say that it is contemplated by r. 95 either.

Let us take up the matter from another point of view. It has already been pointed out that in the latter portion of both the sections the provisions are not similar in spirit or language. The wordings are different. In r. 35, cl. 1 the words "if necessary" have been inserted as against "if need be" in r. 95. There ought to be some difference otherwise the wordings could not have been quite different. Side by side, let us take into consideration the different forms and wordings of the writ of delivery of possession under both the rules. Form No. 11 and Form No. 39 to Appendix E are two distinct forms under rr. 35 and 95 respectively in accordance with which the order of the Civil Court is executed by the bailiff.

Form No. 11 (Or. 21, r. 35).

Warrant to the bailiff to give possession of land, etc., (Or. 21, r. 35).
(Title.)

To

The Bailiff of the Court.

Whereas the undermentioned property in the occupancy of _____ has been decreed to _____, the Plaintiff in this suit, you are hereby directed to put the said _____ in possession of the same, and you are hereby authorized to remove any person bound by the decree who may refuse to vacate the same.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Court, this _____ day of _____ 19 _____

Schedule.

Judge.

Form No. 39 (Or. 21, r. 95).

Order for delivery to certified purchaser of land at a sale.

In execution (Of. 21, r. 95).

To

The Bailiff of the Court.

Whereas . . . has become the certified purchaser of . . . at a sale in execution of decree in suit No. . . of 19 . . ; you are hereby ordered to put the said . . , the certified purchaser, as aforesaid in possession of the same.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Court, this . . day of . . 19 . . Judge.

The latter portion of both the sections are dissimilar in spirit and wording. In the former there is authority given for the removal of the person obstructing while in the latter it has been purposely omitted. The subsequent sections, viz., rr. 97 and 98 deal with resistance or obstruction to possession of immovable property. From the absence of positive direction for the removal of persons in Form No. 11 as well as from the direct provisions as laid down in rr. 97 and 98 it is apparent that the bailiff cannot apply force in delivering possession without any second order from the Court and the Court is to arrive at that decision by closely following the provisions as laid down in rr. 97 and 98. It has already been submitted that the Court is not in a position to deliver possession to the decree-holder by demolishing houses under cl. 1 to r. 35 and it can do so only under cl. 3. As the provisions in r. 95 is similar in spirit it cannot be said that the Court can direct the removal of houses while delivering possession under r. 95. From all these we can safely arrive at the conclusion that if the house itself is not specifically purchased then the auction-purchaser is not entitled under r. 95 to take delivery of possession of the land by removal of houses. The auction-purchaser has got his remedy open and he can bring a title suit for the khas possession of the site by removing the houses standing on it and then possession may be delivered to him in due course of law under cl. 3 to r. 35.

The position of the decree-holder under r. 35 is much better than what the certificated purchaser occupies under r. 95 because in the former the Defendant is treated all along as trespasser while in the latter the property even in the writ of delivery of possession is represented by the judgment-debtor. A decree-holder is not entitled to break down houses under r. 35, if the decree is silent about it. It has been specifically laid down in Radha Gobinda v. Brojendra, 18 Wr. 527, that it is hardly within the province of the executing Court to deliver possession to decree-holder under r. 35 by the removal of buildings thereon, where the decree is silent on the point. If the decree is silent, can we say that the Court can do it under r. 95 where the house was not purchased.

It has already been laid down that in an execution case the question of the removal of huts may arise in three specific cases, viz. :—

- (1) Under a rent decree.
- (2) Under a money decree.
- (3) Under a mortgage decree.

For the sake of convenience let us take the first two cases together. In a rent sale the holding passes to the purchaser while in a sale under a money decree the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor passes to the purchaser. It makes no difference between the two kinds of sales for our present purpose. In the above two cases neither the sale proclamation nor the sale certificate shows that the auction-purchaser has purchased the houses standing on the land, the houses standing on the land not having been advertised for sale. So, in the face of all these, can it be said by any stretch of imagination that the houses would pass to the decree-holder? The auction-purchaser certainly becomes the owner of the land upon which the house stands and he is entitled to take khas possession by removing the houses only by a regular suit.

An auction-purchaser at a mortgage sale stands on a different footing because it is governed by a special Act, viz., the Transfer of Property Act. Properties fall under two categories—moveable and immovable. Houses fall under the category of immovable property. Dr. Ghose observes in his monumental work on Mortgage at page 756: "It is hardly necessary to add that a house being imbedded in the earth is undoubtedly immovable property for though you can move a house, you cannot do it without destroying it." Mortgage is the transfer of an interest in some specific immovable property. Dr. Ghose observes at page 231 of his book: "The word specific in the T. P. Act is ordinarily used in common parlance, as something distinct from general and unless the property is specified in the deed, there can hardly be a mortgage within the meaning of the statute.

The question arises whether the houses standing on the mortgaged land pass to the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser as the case may be, by the application of sec. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act though only the land was specifically mortgaged. It has been laid down in 16 C. W. N. at page 1101, that the law of fixtures has got no application in India. The gist of sec. 8 is that unless a contrary intention can be gathered things attached to the earth would pass with the land. The question is free from confusion where the house itself is mortgaged but the matter becomes complicated where the decree and the bond are silent about the houses standing on the land. In a simple mortgage where only lands are given in mortgage and a decree is drawn up on the basis of the bond and the inventory of the property is also prepared on the basis of the decree, can it be said that the houses standing on the land would pass to the decree-holder or auction-purchaser. The auction-purchaser purchased one kind of specific immoveable property and is he now entitled to say that he has become the owner of another kind of specific immoveable property which happened to be there though he did not purchase it. It would be preposterous to think that a valuable structure would pass with a piece of land which has been given in mortgage for a petty amount. The result is that where only the specific land has been given in mortgage the houses which themselves come under the category of immoveable property cannot be said to have passed with the land and as such the auction-purchaser under the mortgage decree is not entitled to take delivery of possession of the land by breaking down houses.

The conclusion is that decree-holder is not entitled under Or. 21, r. 35 to take delivery of possession by breaking down houses if the decree is silent about it nor is the certificated auction-purchaser entitled to do the same thing under Or. 21, r. 95 where he has become the owner of the land only by purchase through auction the description of the property being specific and definite in the inventory attached to the writ of delivery of possession and not embracing the house.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

July 6th, 7th and 9th. -- Before the same Board the hearing was commenced of Muhammed Khalcel v. Les Tâmeries Lyonnaises. The Appellants are merchants in Madras and brought the suit against the French Company and a man named Marret who they contend was the Company's agent in commercial transactions with the Appellants. Marret had a tannery at Pandicherry and had evolved a patent process for "pickling" skins. The transactions in question were in regard to the purchase and sale of sheep and goat skins which were supplied to the French Government during the war for the needs of the army. The trial Judge made a decree for over a lakh and a half rupees, this was reduced to Rs. 30,000 by the appeal Court.

The appeal, the facts in which are most involved, was opened at some length by Counsel for the Appellants; after Counsel for the Respondents had commenced his argument, the Board intimated that VISCOUNT FINLAY would be unable to preside after July 10th, as he would be sitting on the Hague Tribunal, and realising that the hearing would be protracted, it was adjourned until after the Long Vacation.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Messrs. Kenworthy Brown and Kurup for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Blanco White for the Respondent Company.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for Marret.

July 10th. A Board consisting of VISCOUNT FINLAY, LORD BLANESBURGH and SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI dismissed the appeal from a judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Md. Ali Mamoojee v. Howeson Bros.

The Appellant had entered into a bond as surety for a Receiver appointed in a mortgage suit. The Respondents were the decree-holders. The Receiver defaulted and the Respondents applied to enforce payment against the surety under sec. 145 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Appellant opposed the application mainly on the ground that he had given notice of his revocation of the guarantee under sec. 130 of the Contract Act. The High Court held that sec. 130 could not apply to a surety for a Receiver who had been appointed by the Court and that view is upheld by the Privy Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and K. Brown for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Douglas McNair for the Respondent.

The appeal was dismissed.

July 13th and 14th.—Before LORDS BLANESBURGH and PARKING and SIR JOHN EDGE, the appeal was heard of Ram Protap Chamarra v. Durga Prosad Chamarra. This was an appeal from the Bengal High Court in a suit which had been instituted by the Appellant for dissolution of partnership. After the suit had been filed the parties executed a document referring all matters in dispute for settlement by arbitration. An award was made but on being filed in the suit objections were raised that it dealt with matters outside the suit and affected the rights of persons who were not parties to the suit. These objections were upheld by the Courts in India. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Narasimham for the 1st Respondent.

Mr. W. H. Upjohn, K. C., Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Narasimham for the Respondents Nos. 4 and 5.

July 16th, 17th, 20th and 21st.—The hearing was commenced before LORDS PHILLIMORE and BLANESBURGH and SIR JOHN EDGE of Saklat v. Bella, an appeal from the Chief Court of Lower Burma which raises a question of paramount importance to the Parsi community.

The Appellants are three members of the Rangoon Parsi community and are worshippers in a Parsi fire temple endowed largely by a wealthy Parsi named Bomanjee Cowasjee. The Respondent Bella was the daughter of a Goanese Christian father and her mother was variously alleged to have been a Parsi and an Eurasian Christian. She was befriended by Bomanjee and in effect adopted by his Parsi brother Shapurji and the Narjot ceremony was performed on her by a Parsi priest. Bella was present at the temple in 1915 at an important ceremony and there was considerable indignation on the part of a section of the worshippers which resulted in the filing of this suit. The trial Judge dismissed the suit because the temple trustee was not a party, and the Appellants had failed to show that Bella was not a Zoroastrian. The Chief Court held that the temple had been granted and endowed for the benefit of all Zoroastrians, whether Parsis or not.

The Appellants rely largely on the decision in Bombay in Sir Dinsha Petit v. Sir Jamsetji Jeejeebhoy, where the question of admitting a stranger into the Zoroastrian religion and the Parsi community was very fully considered (I. L. R. 33 Bom. 509). Judgment was reserved.

Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C., Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and Warwick Draper for the Respondent.

July 17th.—In Chandra Sen v. Kanhaiya Lal (Allahabad) application for special leave to appeal was made by Mr. S. Hyam. The original application was out of time. Leave was granted.

In Beramji N. Gamadia v. Bai Shrinbai (Bombay), Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Ramsay applied for the further hearing of the appeal. The suit related to the mortgage of a cotton press situated in Hyderabad, Deccan, and was instituted in 1910. It was part heard by the Privy Council in 1916 and adjourned for a decision to be obtained from the Hyderabad Court. That decision was obtained in 1923. Mr. E. B. Raikes opposed. Leave was granted and the further hearing fixed for next sittings unless the parties came to terms in the meantime.

July 21st.—In Maharaja of Burdwan v. Nritya Gopal Sinha, Mr. Parikh applied for special leave to appeal in the above suit. Leave was refused.

An application was made by Mr. E. B. Raikes to vary the order in Council in Jacob v. Wills, so as to include interest on the damages awarded by the trial Judge whose findings were restored by the Privy Council. Leave was refused on the ground that the order was already drawn up and no variation was desirable.

Judgment was delivered in Mahabir Prosad Tewari v. Jamuna Singh. The appeal was dismissed.

PROCLAIMED OFFENDER AND "PROCLAIMED PERSON."

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,
There does not seem to be any such anomalies in the provisions of the Cr. P. Code as have been discussed by Mr. Susil K. Mukherjee in your last issue.

Sec. 87, Cr. P. Code, lays down cases in which proclamation may issue, and they certainly do cover cases of accused persons as well as witnesses. The Courts are bound to do their best to bring both the offenders and the witnesses before them, for there can be no administration of justice as conceived by the codes without either; proclamation is the last process to secure their attendance. The separate forms in Sch V make it clear. So the words "proclaimed persons" are properly used in sec. 87 and sec. 88 instead of "proclaimed offenders."

Now without a restrictive clause as is found in sec. 45 (2) (ii) "proclaimed offenders" would certainly mean all accused persons against whom proclamations have been issued. But the aforementioned clause restricts the meaning of the expression to persons proclaimed as being accused of committing offences under sec. 302, I. P. C., etc., only. The sections, etc., have got to be stated in the proclamation, vide form IV, Sch 5. The persons volunteering to effect the arrest are presumed to know the contents of the proclamation. A witness proclaimed therefore cannot be treated on the same footing as the offender proclaimed who comes within sec. 45 (2) (ii).

The form does not use the words "proclaimed offenders." The person seeking to arrest must deduce the fact by applying his mind to the contents thereof, just as a Police officer receiving a requisition must judge for himself whether he can legally comply, vide sec. 54 (9). The statement of the time and place for appearance in the proclamation does not present any real difficulty; for in spite of that, it has been held that a person against whom proclamation has been issued, is "in contempt and the Court can entertain no petition on their behalf until they actually surrender." On parity of reasoning, there is no incongruity in a person arresting before the time mentioned has expired. It should also be noted that attachment under sec. 88 may also be made immediately after the proclamation without waiting for the expiry of the time.

Judging from the other clauses of sec. 54 it would appear that a Police officer may arrest without warrant only in cases of specified classes of serious offences. The Legislature cannot have meant the authority under clause three to extend to all offences including the lightest, simply on the ground of the accused absconding. Sec. 89 invests private persons with authority still more limited and hence the power of arrest by private persons must be limited to offences referred in sec. 45 (2) (ii).

Yours faithfully,
SATISH CHAND RAY CHOWDHURY, Vakil, Mymensingh.

WOODROFFE AND AMEER ALI'S LAW OF EVIDENCE APPLICABLE TO BRITISH INDIA, EIGHTH EDITION. By Sir John Woodroffe, Messrs. Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta.

This well-known treatise on the Law of Evidence by Woodroffe and Ameër Ali has now been thoroughly revised by Sir John Woodroffe and the new edition contains much additional matter which considerably enhances the value of the work to students and practising lawyers. The remarkable feature of the book is its capacity "to meet the wants, both of the profession and of the student." Much that is necessary for a practising lawyer is superfluous for a student and much that is needed for a student is not ordinarily of much interest to a practising lawyer. The author has succeeded, by a judicious separation of the subject-matter, in re-arranging the commentaries in a way that satisfies the one without interfering with the wealth of information which are so useful to the practitioner.

The Indian Evidence Act is the skeleton on which a well-developed body of the law of evidence has been built up and it is a complete and comprehensive treatise on the subject. The sections on relevancy without a clear exposition of them is a hopeless task for a beginner to try to understand, but the author's lucid treatment of the subject, together with a masterly introduction full of copious illustrations from decided cases such as R. v. Palmer, R. v. Donellan, R. v. Richardson, will more than amply repay the labours of an earnest student, while a general and historical treatment of the subject, removes the dull and dreary aspect that invariably attaches to codified laws.

The author has spared no pains to make the work quite up-to-date in every respect. The cases in the addenda of the last edition have been incorporated in the body of the work in their appropriate places and important decisions from 1920 to 1924 have been noted in an addenda of cases.

Basant Lal. Joint decree-holders—Application by one for execution of whole decree

REPORTS (See Index.)

Liability of one of several tenants of the land to be sued for the whole rent—Other tenants known to the landlord, if necessary parties.

The question which came up for consideration before the Full Bench in Kailash Chandra Mitra v. Brojendra K. Chakravarti, 29 C. W. N. 108, was one of considerable difficulty, and the difficulty was, to our mind, largely due to the language of sec. 43 of the Indian Contract Act. That section expressly says that when two or more persons make a joint promise the promisee may, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, compel any one or more of such joint promisors to perform the whole of the promise; and the intention of the legislature is made clear by the clause which follows relegating the other joint promisors to a suit for contribution. Sec. 42 which deals with the devolution of joint liabilities on the death of one of such joint promisors does not in so many words say that one of the representatives of a deceased joint promisor may be proceeded against singly in the same way, but that he may appear to follow inferentially from the language of sec. 43 read with that of sec. 42.

Now in the case before the Full Bench the interest of a lessee of land had passed by devolution and assignment to a number of persons, and the first question that arose was as to the nature of the liability of these persons. The three Judges composing the majority and Mukerji, J., were all agreed that these persons held the land as tenants in common and their liability was joint and several—exactly what the position of joint promisors and their representatives of those of them who are dead has been made to be by secs. 42 and 43 of the Indian Contract Act. So, if the principle underlying these sections applied to the case, the conclusion inevitably followed that “a suit for rent is maintainable against some of the heirs or successors-in-interest of a deceased tenant without bringing all the heirs or successors-in-interest on the record”—and that is what the majority have held in the case.

It is undeniable, however, that the application of this rule to suits for rents against some of the tenants in occupation must in most cases lead to anomalous consequences. It is impossible not to agree with Mukerji, J., that the presence of the other tenants is necessary, amongst other reasons, for determining whether the liability which is prima facie joint is joint and several, for protecting the Defendant from being made to pay what may have already been paid by the others, for safe-guarding against the eventuality of his being defeated in a suit for contribution, as the co-tenant against whom a suit for contribution is brought will not be bound by the result of the earlier suit, for preventing conflicting decisions as to the character and incidents of the same tenancy being arrived at in different suits. This being so, one understands the inwardness of the view of the majority, as expressed in B. B. Ghose, J.'s judgment that the tenants in the case in question may be taken to have impliedly promised to pay the rent jointly within the meaning of sec. 43 of the Contract Act and of the opposing view of Mukerji, J., that the liability arose out of privity of estate and not on account of a joint promise to pay, express or implied, so as to attract the application of sec. 43 of the Contract Act.

As we have said, if secs. 42 and 43 of the Indian Contract Act had been out of the way, we would have no hesitation in agreeing with Mukerji, J.'s solution of the question, viz., that the Defendant would have a right in such a case to insist on the Plaintiff making all the tenants known to be tenants of the holding Defendant in the suit, the suit being liable to dismissal as wrongly constituted on his failure. We would agree with him also that the suit would not fail merely because the remedy against the added Defendants may have been lost by lapse of time, and that a decree eventually obtained in the absence of all the tenants would not be a nullity but would not (and in this the majority agree) operate as a rent decree under Chap. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But secs. 42 and 43 of the Contract Act appear to us to be very much in the way, and our deliberate conclusion is that they have gone too far in their departure from the rules obtaining in England, and stand in need of amendment on the lines laid down in the judgment of Mukerji, J.

UNDER-RAIYATS.

In our previous article published in this volume at pp. 127-128 (Notes portion), we indicated how under-raiyats may acquire a right of occupancy in their tenancies. It was also pointed out that though they may acquire a right of occupancy in their tenancies, still they are no better than under-raiyats and that saving the provisions of sec. 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, all the other incidents of under-raiyati tenancies will apply to their tenancies.

Now, what are the incidents of such tenancies? Is the occupancy right of an under-raiyat heritable? In the light of our above remark, it may safely be said that such a right is not heritable. According to the view expressed by Das and Adami, JJ., in 75 I. C. 427, such tenants do not acquire the status of occupancy raiyats. Consequently, Chap. V of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot apply to such tenancies. Chap. VII of the same Act deals with under-raiyats. There is no provision similar to that of sec. 26 in Chap. V, regarding heritability of under-raiyati tenancies in Chap. VII of the Act. So, if an under-raiyat having a right of occupancy in his tenancy dies, his heirs have no right, apart from custom or usage, to inherit the same. And it was so held by Greaves and Cuming, JJ., overruling the decision of B. B. Ghose, J., in a recent case reported in this volume at pp. 733-38.

But how are we to ascertain the existence of such a custom or usage? A clue to it was hinted at by the Revenue Board in Rule 341, p. 98 in the Board's Manual, 1909, Part II, Chap. III, which we quote below:—

“Occupancy rights are most commonly acquired by under-raiyats in cases where they have reclaimed lands by their own exertions, or have occupied their holdings for a long period and been allowed by the superior raiyat to erect homesteads, dig tanks or plant trees on them. Where in such or analogous cases, occupancy rights have been acquired by under-raiyats, the occupancy right should be duly recorded. Where the local custom or usage is doubtful or is opposed to the acquisition of occupancy rights, no entry regarding occupancy rights need be made.”

Whether heritability is an incident of such custom or usage, is to be ascertained as a matter of fact. It is a question of fact and not one of law. In many localities, we find that there are different grades of tenants under under-raiyats, such as “darkorfadars,” “dara-darkorfadars” and so on and that under-raiyati tenancies descend from father to son. Landlords do not object to such descent which gradually becomes customary or sanctioned by usage.

Now, suppose the holding of a raiyat is sold in execution of a rent-decree against him. Will the purchaser of the holding be entitled to annul, by a notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the interest of an under-raiyat with a right of occupancy under him? It may be argued that according to the view expressed in 75 I. C. 427, the tenant's status being that of an under-raiyat, his interest is liable to annulment. But that is not so. Sec. 160 deals with protected interests and cl. (2) of the same makes “any right of occupancy” a protected interest. So we see that the interest of an under-raiyat with a right of occupancy is not capable of annulment by a notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Now, we come to the question of transferability of under-raiyati tenancies. Sec. 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act restricts the grant of sub-leases by raiyats to a period not exceeding nine years. That section has, therefore, no application to under-raiyati tenancies. Under-raiyats can grant permanent sub-leases. It was so held in 18 C. W. N. 882. The principle laid down in this ruling was followed in the case reported in 19 C. W. N. 1110. These sub-lessees and their tenants, if any, are all under-raiyats as is evident from the definition of under-raiyats. According to the definition in cl. (3) of sec. 4 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, under-raiyats are those who hold their tenancies "immediately or mediately" under raiyats.

In the case of an out-and-out transfer, it was laid down in 20 C. L. J. 548, that where an under-raiyat transfers his entire tenancy to a third party, and there was no proof of payment of rent or of any arrangement made to pay the rent, and thus there was relinquishment of the holding, the landlord was entitled to khas possession.

In 18 C. L. J. 262, it was laid down that the provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act contemplates that an under-raiyat may, under certain circumstances, acquire an occupancy right. If he does so, such right may be transferable by custom or usage. But there is no authority for the proposition that the interest of an under-raiyat is ipso facto transferable.

An under-raiyat acquiring a right of occupancy in his tenancy, still being no better than an under-raiyat, will be subject to the operation under sec. 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

There can be no commutation of rent in kind payable by an under-raiyat though he may acquire the right of occupancy in his tenancy. There is no provision for commutation in Chap. VII of the Act. So, according to the ruling reported in 25 C. W. N. 417, the order of a Revenue Officer for commutation of rent, where the tenant is not an occupancy raiyat, is without jurisdiction.

INTERPRETATION OF SEC. 162, CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE.

Few amendments have given rise to so much controversy as the re-drafting of sec. 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the Amending Act, XVIII of 1923. The Select Committee wrote as follows:—"The amendment of sec. 162 has been discussed at great length by the Committee. It has been the subject of amendment before and of constant difficulty in the Courts. We therefore propose to re-cast the section."

It must be acknowledged with regret, however, that whatever other merits may or may not be claimed on behalf of the re-constituted section, it has not succeeded in removing the difficulty of the Courts.

The new section runs as follows:—"No statement made by 'any person' to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter, shall, if reduced to writing, be signed by the person making it; nor shall any such statement or any record thereof whether in a police diary or otherwise or any part of such statement or record be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at any inquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made."

Do the words "any person" used in the section include an accused person who makes a statement before the police in the course of an investigation? The words are certainly wide enough in their import to include an accused person as well as a witness. But if this view is accepted, sec. 162, Cr. P. Code, would override and render nugatory the provision of sec. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, which provides that "when any fact is deposited to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence in the custody of a police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved." Sec. 162, Cr. P. Code, would however exclude such statements simply because they are made to a police officer in the course of an investigation.

The anomaly may be removed by holding that the words "any person," in sec. 162, Cr. P. Code, refer to witnesses and not to accused persons. Authority for this view may, probably be derived from the wording of sec. 161, Cr. P. Code, which empowers certain police officers to examine orally "any person" supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. The marginal note to the section shows that it refers to the "examination of witnesses by the police." It is clear therefore that the words "any person" in this section refer to witnesses and not to accused persons.

In Queen-Empress v. Jadab Das, 4 C. W. N. 129, the Calcutta High Court remarked on the impropriety of the police in taking down the statement of an accused professedly under sec. 161, Cr. P. Code, as preliminary to his arrest and pointed out that a statement under sec. 161, Cr. P. Code, was intended to be taken only for the purpose of obtaining evidence.

It may be argued from this that the words "any person" are used in sec. 162, Cr. P. C., in the same sense as in sec. 161, Cr. P. Code, that is to say, as referring to a witness and not to an accused person. It must be remembered, however, that the marginal note of sec. 161, Cr. P. Code, has not been reproduced in sec. 162, Cr. P. Code. The note is no doubt explanatory of the words used in sec. 161, Cr. P. Code, but it cannot, logically, be used to interpret any other section of the Code.

The legislature ought to signify clearly whether sec. 162, Cr. P. Code, is meant to repeal sec. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act. Such parts of a confessional statement as lead to the discovery of incriminating facts, as also statements made to the police by an accused person which are not of an incriminating nature have always been held to be admissible by all the High Courts. If sec. 162, Cr. P. Code, applies to the statement of an accused person, the law on the point must be held to have been entirely changed.

In a very recent case, Umer Duraz Munshi v. Emperor, 86 Ind. Cas. 410, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner at Sind has held that the words "statement of any person" in sec. 162, Cr. P. Code, do not refer to the statement of an accused person in respect of whom an investigation is being held by the police. It would be interesting to know the views of the High Courts on this important point.

THE AGE OF CONSENT BILL.

To

SIR,

I have been noticing an inordinate amount of jubilation in that section of the public press which professes to hold advanced views on social and religious matters over the passage in the Legislative Assembly of the Bill raising the age of consent in the case of married girls to 13 and unmarried girls to 14 by the thumping majority of 84 to 11; and the report of the proceedings in the Assembly in the papers shows abundantly that most of this majority have been patting themselves incontinently on the back for making what they imagine to be a heroic stand against the forces of blind orthodoxy and unreason. If this represents in any degree the normal mentality of the so-called advanced section of the community, I feel constrained to say that that section must be singularly lacking in the practice of introspection. So far as the raising of the age of consent to 13 of married girls is concerned, it will remain as much a dead letter as the age of 12 has been. The abuse of child-marriage—for abuse it is—needs dealing with by direct frontal attacks and not by diplomatic manœuvres which serve only to lull the conscience of the community and thereby retard real progress. What is needed is the raising of the legal age of marriage for girls and not the age of consent of such girls after they are married. But our advance-guards of the press and the Legislative Assemblies apparently lack the courage to hit even the most palpable of abuses in the eye for fear of rousing the demon of reaction. They no doubt flatter themselves that by simply registering pious wishes in the form of statutes which are bound to prove dead letters, they are yet making solid progress in the direction of educating public opinion. This must be sheer self-deception. Wrong tendencies whether individual or communal can never be effectively controlled by such cheap make-believes. They have to be fought down, if at all, directly by ranging the moral forces of the communal mind consciously against and making them prevail over such tendencies. That was the method of our Rammohun Roys and Vidya sagars, and that should be the method of th

Knights of our Legislative Assemblies out to bring succour to the helpless and the oppressed. There may, if the direct method be adopted, be a reaction in the first instance due to unreasoning fear. But the pendulum will swing back with all the greater force after a time. To place a measure like the Age of Consent Bill on the 'statute book' is not legislation but just playing at legislation.

To

DEAR SIR,

In Issue No. 42 of the Calcutta Weekly Notes (last number) I find an article with the heading "Jurisdiction of Civil Court to pull down huts when giving delivery of possession." The article purports to be contributed by Babu Ramesh Chandra Dhar, B.L., Pleader, Netrakona. A very sensational case recently arose in the Sub-Divisional town of Netrakona in connection with the pulling down of the judgment-debtor's huts by an auction-purchaser immediately on his getting delivery of possession under r. 95, Or. 21, C. P. C. It is alleged that the man whose huts were pulled down was a peon of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's Court and the conduct of the Sub-Divisional Officer, in connection with the criminal proceedings that arose, is impugned by the auction-purchaser. Babu Ramesh Chandra Dhar, it appears, was a pleader engaged on behalf of the prosecution in the said case at Netrakona. The case has been transferred by the Additional Magistrate to his own file and it is pending there. The accused moved the Sessions Judge for a reference to the High Court for quashing the proceedings, and it was heard yesterday. The issue, in which the article in question appeared was received here the day before.

I think it is very undesirable that a party who has to argue a law-point in a case sub-judice should first air his views through his pleaders, in law journals, and it is equally undesirable that a highly respectable law journal like the Calcutta Weekly Notes should throw its columns open for such a purpose. The article is apparently an inspired one.

However it is evident that the writer of the said article has made a very poor study of the law which he professes to write upon.

Yours sincerely,

ROMESH CHANDRA BHATTACHARYA,

Pleader, Judge's Court,
Mymensingh.

10-9-25.

NOTE.—If the facts are as stated above we sincerely regret that the article in question was at all published in our columns. When such articles are sent to us it is understood that they do not relate to matters sub-judice. We accept such contributions relying on the good faith of our correspondents who are all lawyers. We request our readers not to send us any contributions which may directly or indirectly relate to any matter pending in a Court of law.—E. C. W. N.

THE COURT FEES ACT AND THE SUITS VALUATION ACT. By M. N. Basu, M.A., B.L. Second Edition: Eastern Law House, Law Publishers, 15, College Square, Calcutta, 1925.

That a second edition of this work should have been called for in so short a time is not at all surprising, since, Mr. Basu's commentaries have proved themselves far and out the most well-arranged and the completest amongst all those that have appeared since the provincial legislatures took to amending the Court Fees Act for revenue purposes. The case-law and the rules have been brought up to date and for this purpose as also for purposes of revision Mr. Basu has made the fullest use of the experience that his work as Stamp Reporter to the Calcutta High Court has brought him from day to day. Besides the text of the main Acts with the commentaries, the various Provincial Amendments and all the rules framed for application in the several provinces including the deductions and reversions sanctioned by the Central Government are incorporated in the book. The book is as handy and well got-up as one may wish it in a manual which is required for constant reference.

THE STAMP ACT, (II OF 1899). By S. Kasturi Rangachariar, B.A., B.L. Second Edition, 1925. Printed and published by the Law Printing House and the Lawyer's Companion Office, Madras, 1925.

This edition of the commentaries brings the legislative changes bearing on the Act and the case-law up to the end of March 1925 and the Stamp Rules published by the Government of India so late as in May last have also been duly incorporated in the compilation of repealed Statutes, Rules and Notifications which are appended to the commentaries and form nearly a third of the book. This edition of the Stamp Act is about the most up to date available at the present moment. The texts of the main Act and the Provincial Amendments are also given, the alterations in the former made by the latter being referred to in notes appended to the text of the main Act and by reproducing the texts of the Amending Acts. This is followed by the text of the main Act with the commentaries. It is a most exhaustive compilation of all that one needs to know in connection with the law of stamps and is bound to prove most valuable as a book of ready reference.

COMMENTARIES ON THE USURIOUS LOANS ACT (X OF 1918), with a complete exposition of the Law of Interest in British India. By P. Ramanatha Aiyar, B.A., B.L. Second Edition: The Madras Law Journal Office, Mylapore, Madras, 1925.

This work is a treatise on the law of interest first and a commentary on the Usurious Loans Act afterwards. The latter indeed is relegated in an appendix of 40 pages, whilst nearly three hundred pages are devoted to an examination of the law relating to interest under 13 chapter headings. The Introductory Chapter goes deeply into history and even pre-history. Mr. P. Ramanatha Aiyar is a most painstaking commentator of law books and his industry is only equalled by the wide range of his explorations in and in relation to the subject which for the time interests him. The profession will without doubt profit by his industry and research in connection with the present subject.

COMMENTARIES ON THE PROVINCIAL SMALL CAUSE COURTS ACT. By P. Ramanatha Aiyar, B.A., B.L. The Madras Law Journal Office, Mylapore, Madras, 1925.

Unlike the previous work the present is a commentary on the statute in question in the orthodox style, texts of the sections followed by case-notes and comments. But in the usual style of Mr. Aiyar's compilations, the notes are exhaustive and well arranged—so much so that the book will, we expect, hold its own amongst the most of other commentaries on this much-annotated Act.

THE INDIAN EVIDENCE ACT. By Subodh Chandra Lahiri, M.A., B.L. Ray and Ray Chowdhury. College Street Market, Calcutta. Price Rs. 2-8.

We like this little book, which is really smaller and bigger than it looks. Bigger, because it is annotated, the references to cases being abundant, but the notes are not commentaries but brief memorandum. In these commentary-ridden times, one feels the necessity of compilations like these and grateful to the author who has the courage and capacity to be brief without being unintelligible.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY AND MUKERJI, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 402 OF 1923. NAWAB NUZHATUDDOWLA ABBAS HUSSAIN KHAN, Judgment-debtor, Appellant v. BENI MADHO BASANT RAI and ors., Decree-holders, Respondents. The 30th June 1925.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, rr. 11 and 15—Joint decree-holders—Application by one for execution of whole decree—Omission to state the names and interests of the other decree-holders in application, if fatal—Notice on other decree-holders, if obligatory—Court's duty to safeguard the interests of other decree-holders.

The appeal arose out of an application filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court at Alipur on 11th April 1922 for execution of a decree of the Privy Council passed in favour of one Prince Naubeg Mirza and others. By assignment, or devolution, the decree-holder's interest passed into the hands of several persons as follows:—A ten annas share was sold to Mehdi Hossain who in his turn sold four annas of his ten annas to one Lal Mohan Lal, which share on the latter's death passed to his heirs Beni Madho and Basant Rai. The six annas share remaining with Mehdi Hossain devolved on his death on his widow Haidari Begum, his two daughters Zakia and Taiba Begum and his two sons Nazir Hossain and Abid Hossain. The two and a half annas share of Haidari Begum, Zakia Begum and Taiba Begum vested in the said Beni Madho and Basant Rai as administrators to their estates. Razir Hossain and Abid Hossain were declared insolvents and their three and a half annas share vested in one Prabhu Doyal Rastogi, the Receiver in Insolvency appointed by Court. The six annas share of the decree which remained after the assignment of ten annas to Mehdi Hossain devolved on Sultan Hossain, Mirza Akbari Begum and Delband Begum. The application for execution was made by Sultan Hossain Mirza. In the application, the name of the executing decree-holder and those of Beni Madho and Basant Rai and also of Nawab Delband Begum and Nawab Akbari Begum were mentioned, but it was not stated whether Beni Madho and Basant Rai were there as administrators to the estates of Haidari Begum, Zakia Begum and Taiba Begum or as heirs of Lala Mohan Lal. The names of Nazir Hossain and Abid Hossain, the insolvents, nor that of Prabhu Doyal Rastogi, the Receiver in Insolvency, were at all mentioned in the application. The application however purported to be under Or. 21, r. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code for the benefit of all the decree-holders. Applications were subsequently made by Beni Madho and Basant Rai and by Prabhu Doyal Rastogi disclosing the shares and interests held by them and the several capacities in which they held them. The judgment-debtor objected to the application proceeding on the grounds inter alia that the application was defective in form, that notices had not been issued to the other decree-holders and that the application was barred by limitation. All the objections having been overruled by the trial Court, the judgment-debtor preferred this appeal:

Held—That the omission on the part of the applying decree-holder to state in the application for execution the names of all the persons interested in the decree was not such a defect as having regard to the requirements of Or. 21, r. 11 invalidate the execution proceedings. The names of the parties to the decree have to be stated under the rule so that there may not be any difficulty in the matter of the identification of the decree in respect of which execution is sought. It is quite true that when an application is made under r. 15 by one of the decree-holders for execution of the whole decree which has been passed jointly in favour of himself and others, the Court has got to pass proper orders in order to protect the interests of all the decree-holders, but it is not absolutely necessary that the names of all the decree-holders should be given in the execution petition by the executing decree-holder.

As to notice to the other decree-holders, it is not obligatory on the Court to issue such notice. It is in the discretion of the Court whether or not notice should be given to the other decree-holders before making an order for execution under r. 15. In the present case the other decree-holders having subsequently come in and given their consent, there was no reason for apprehending that their interests had not been properly safeguarded, and the defect, if any, was not such as would invalidate the proceedings.

As to limitation, the objection was untenable in view of the fact established by the evidence that there were successful applications for execution in 1906 and 1914.

Messrs. Bimala Charan Deb and Tarakeswar Nath Mitra for the Appellant.

Messrs. Amarendra Nath Bose and A. S. M. Akran for the petitioning decree-holder.

Mr. Nagendra Nath Ghose for Beni Madho and Basant Rai.
